KIDNAPERS TAKE RANSOM; HOLD BABY

HOOVER ASKS FEDERAL FURLOUGHS AS ACCORD ON SAVING IS REACHED

President Favors 5-Day Week for Per Diem Employes.

TOTAL OF ECONOMIES MAY BE $300,000,000

House Group Holds Out for Salary Cut; "Lump-Sum" Passage Planned.

(Associated Press.)

A national economy program estimated to save from $160,000,000 to $210,000,000 in 1933 was tentatively agreed upon yesterday by President Hoover and the House economy committee.

Other retrenchment proposals under consideration, if enacted, are expected by the Chief Executive and Chairman McDuffie to bring the total to about $300,000,000.

The program finally agreed upon after a conference at the White House lasting six hours, followed, to a great extent, that submitted by the committee, which was along the general lines of President Hoover's recommendations. The methods of approach, however, were different, and two major points of controversy arose.

President Hoover proposed a fiveday week for per diem employes and the staggering of work for other employes by means of furloughs without pay, estimated to save $45,000,000. McDuffie, however, held out for an 11 per cent salary cut, with a $1,000 exemption, estimated to net $67,000,000.

Exclusive Consolidation.

In a formal statement issued at the White House, without signatures of either the President or members of the committee, it was explained the savings tentatively agreed upon did not include those to be made through consolidations or reductions in appropriations as suggested by the committee.

Mr. Hoover held out successfully that the savings program be accomplished through alteration or repeal of existing laws. One of the Chief Executive's secretaries estimated, however, if the committee proceeded with its consolidation and appropriation reducing proposals, an additional $100,000,000 or more might be cut from expenditures.

The committee's suggestion for consolidation of the War and Navy Departments was omitted from the national program, at President Hoover's suggestion.

Both President Hoover and Speaker Garner feel strongly that if the economy proposals are lumped into an omnibus bill, public sentiment for retrenchment will overwhelm the storm of individual protests it is expected to create.

Chairman McDuffie said after the conference the committee of seven and Mr. Hoover "worked together in an earnest effort to reduce the expenditures of this Government and representatives of the executive department will work with us on the program."

Secretary Mills and J. C. Roop, budget director, are to meet with the committee from time to time in continuation of the conference.

Altogether there was a difference

White House Statement On Economy Conference

The statement issued by the White House yesterday, on the economy conference, follows in full:

As a result of mutual exchange of views by the administration and the economy committee the following was tentatively agreed upon as a national economy program.

The total of savings so far arrived at would amount to somewhere from $160,000,000 to $210,000,000. This does not include the saving to be made from consolidations (group 2) or from reductions in appropriations (group 3). The conferences will continue.

Reductions in expenses require action in three directions:

Class 1. The amendment or repeal of existing laws which would prevent the realization of savings.

Class 2. Legislation for the reorganization and consolidation of Government functions so as to eliminate overlap, unnecessary bureaus and commissions, and waste.

Class 3. Reduction of appropriations which are within the authority of the existing laws creating and specifying various activities of the Government. This class, being under consideration by the appropriations committee of Congress, was not dealt with in the conference.

Group 1. The savings which can be effected only by the amendment or repeal of existing laws or by the granting of additional authority in certain cases.

1. Authorize for one year the head of any department or independent establishment, with the approval of

HEAD OF REICHSBANK TARGET OF ASSASSIN

Bullet Fired at Dr. Luther Grazes His Arm as He Awaits Train.

Berlin, April 9 (A.P.).—Dr. Hans Luther, president of the Reichsbank, narrowly escaped assassination by a bullet fired at him tonight while he was pacing the platform of the Potsdamer station in Berlin, waiting for a train to take him to Basel, Switzerland.

The bullet, fired at close range by one of two men who had been quietly walking up and down the platform, passed through one sleeve of Dr. Luther's coat and inflicted a slight scratch about 1½ inches below his elbow. The bullet then entered the heel of a nearby railway porter's boot.

The man who fired the shot told police his name was Dr. Max Roosen and that he was 58 years old. He said he was born in Buenos Aires, went to London in 1930 and had been only a short time in Berlin.

He smiling surrendered his pistol. Both he and his companion, who gave the name of Werner Kertscher, admitted cheerfully, police said, that they planned to shoot Dr. Luther because they disapproved of the Reichsbank's deflation policy, and wanted a "controlled inflation." They denied any political motive.

The whole affair developed so quickly that few of the other travelers were aware of what happened.

Bank Messenger Loses $7,100 to Kidnapers

Racine, Wis., April 9 (A.P.).—Theodore Losinski, 22, messenger for the North Side Bank, told authorities he was kidnaped in his own automobile and robbed of $7,100 of the bank's funds today by three men who bound and gagged him.

Losinski said an automobile carrying Illinois license plates forced him to stop. Two men entered his car and overpowered him. Outside the city the robbers took the money, he said, and drove away. He managed to loosen his bonds and free himself.

GERMANY WILL VOTE ON PRESIDENT TODAY

Bitter Campaign Closes With Hindenburg and Hitler Forces Confident.

Berlin, April 9 (A.P.).—The bitter presidential campaign came to an end tonight, leaving the millions of supporters of President Paul von Hindenburg confident he will win in tomorrow's voting.

The optimism of the government forces was duplicated by the National Socialist disciples of Adolf Hitler, who insisted vociferously that their Fascist leader would corral at least 15,000,000 votes—probably enough to sweep him into power.

Political commentators generally agreed that the one chance of a Nazi victory rested in the possible failure of the Von Hindenburg supporters to turn out in the way they did on the occasion of the indecisive election March 13, when the 84-year-old field marshal piled up 18,654,690 votes, less than 175,000 short of the required majority. In tomorrow's run-off a plurality suffices.

Aware of the danger of overconfidence, Chancellor Heinrich Bruening, chief of the Von Hindenburg leaders, has covered more ground during the campaign than any chancellor before him. Everywhere he urged the voters to crown the field marshal's career

Stenographer Kills Self AfterEmployer's Suicide

Philadelphia, April 9 (A.P.).—Sixteen hours after her employer committed suicide, Miss Frances M. Carey, Chester, Pa., a stenographer, leaped to death from the eighth floor of the Benjamin Franklin Hotel, here. Her body was found today on the roof of a two-story portion of the hotel, but she is believed to have hurled herself out the window last night.

Yesterday, the accountant for whom she worked at a Chester oil company, Charles Hankins, jr., 34, father of two children and an honor student at the Wharton School of Finance, University of Pennsylvania, was found dead from gas at his home here.

Man Slain in Raid By Lottery Bandits

Victim, Robber, Hit by Companion's Bullet; Three Wounded.

New York, April 9 (A.P.).—One man was killed and three were seriously wounded when a trio of robbers attempted today to hold up a place described by police as a bookmaking and lottery establishment in Elizabeth street.

The dead man, one of the invaders, was believed by police to have been shot by one of his companions in the wild crossfire that studded the walls of the place with bullet holes. He was Nicholas Annunziato, 24.

The shooting began when one of the robbers' victims, Dominick Tromola, 25, suddenly seized a revolver pointed at him. The robbers made a break for the door. Annunziato fell dead in the hallway, a bullet through his head, and three of his pursuers fell wounded. They were Anthony Tromola, 29; John Tabarsio, 29, and Vito Ginhanto, 27.

Cherry Bloom 'Rush' Due Under Cloudy Skies Today

Washington will see the first of the cherry blossoms this afternoon under cloudy skies, unless a good fairy does some quick work overnight and brings out the sunshine.

Rain is predicted for this morning and uncertain weather for this afternoon. Nevertheless arrangements are being made by park police to accommodate large crowds along cherry blossom row.

The blossoms, due to the cold, rainy weather, will not be out in full display today. All that is now needed to bring out the buds in full glory is a brief warm spell, official horticulturists said. The trees are now said to be about 30 per cent in bloom.

All members of the park police force will be on duty today, under command of Capt. C. Montgomery. From 10 o'clock this morning until dark there will be one-way traffic around Tidal Basin from Connecticut avenue on Seventeenth street, turning left at John Paul Jones statue, instead of right as usually.

No parking will be permitted on the Tidal Basin side of the road either way. Traffic from Fourteenth street to the basin must turn right over Inlet Bridge or at the Bureau of Engraving and Printing.

Traffic from Virginia must use the Columbia Island section of the

4 DEFENDANTS IN HAWAII WILL ADMIT KILLING

Will Give Triple Defense When Trial Resumes Tomorrow.

DARROW WILL LET STATE BARE DRAMA

Will Use Imported Alienists to Establish Quartet's Emotional Collapse.

(Copyright, 1932, by the United Press.)

Honolulu, T. H., April 9 (U.P.).—Mrs. Grace Hubbard Fortescue, socially prominent American, and her three naval codefendants will admit killing Joe Kahahawai when their trial is resumed Monday, and will "depend upon the jury and island Caucasians for vindication," it was learned today.

Through cautious maneuvering of Clarence Darrow, their chief of counsel, Mrs. Fortescue and her son-in-law, Lieut. Thomas H. Massie, and E. J. Lord and A. O. Jones, Navy enlisted men, will use prosecution witnesses, it was learned, to sustain their claim that Kahahawai was killed assertedly for participating in "mob attack" of Mrs. Fortescue's daughter, Thalia Massie, wife of the young Navy officer.

Kahahawai was killed last January. He was one of five natives and Orientals who allegedly attacked Mrs. Massie.

The defendants will present a triple defense—unwritten law, "accidental" emotional collapse, and "alarm clock" or spontaneous but temporary insanity, it was said.

When the defense starts its presentation, Massie, it was revealed, will go on the witness stand and make a frank admission of all facts in the case. Preliminary to this, it was said, Darrow will use prosecution witnesses to lay bare the entire drama.

It also was learned for the first time today just what part two eminent alienists imported from Los Angeles will play.

The psychiatrists, Mrs. Edward Williams and John Orbison, will be used to establish the "emotional collapse" of the defendants when Kahahawai allegedly was kidnaped and killed. The name of the person who fired the shot that killed the youth will be disclosed and the alienists will then lay the ground work for the defense's claim of justification, it was declared.

Veterans' Official Upheld by House

Move by Blanton to Stop Pay of W. W. Smith Is Beaten, 70 to 6.

(Associated Press.)

An effort by Representative Blanton (Democrat), Texas, to stop the pay of William Wolff Smith, general counsel of the Veterans' Administration, failed in the House yesterday by a 70-to-6 vote. Blanton called Smith a "parasite" and said that in addition to a large salary he is drawing retirement pay under the emergency officers retirement act.

"He was put there as counsel by politics, and he knows just about as much about law as this telegraph page here," Blanton said. Representative Swing (Republican), California, replied to the Texan, opposing his motion.

"The gentleman from Texas occasionally gets an obsession," Swing said. "He crossed swords on a legal point with Mr. Smith, and the general counsel of the Veterans' Administration could not agree with him on a question of administrative law. This obsession apparently started there."

Paper's Political Issue Is Stolen in Chicago

Chicago, April 9 (A.P.).—Eight men raided the offices of the Chicago Globe, a community newspaper, today, threatened the crew of workmen, broke up the forms and carried away all of the 24,000 copies of an edition discussing next Tuesday's primary.

Among the articles in the papers seized by the hoodlums was one attacking the candidacy of State Representative Michael A. Ruddy, running for reelection in the Fourth Senatorial District and for Fifteenth Ward Republican committeeman.

Illinois Doctor Missing After Mysterious Call

North Chicago, Ill., April 9 (A. P.).—A widespread search was underway tonight for Dr. A. E. Budde, city physician of this North Shore Chicago suburb, who supposedly was kidnapped after being lured from his home early this morning by a telephone call for his services.

Detectives had only three clews to guide them:

The physician's black leather bag containing his instruments, found close to the scene of the supposed accident several hours after he had been summoned;

A note he left on a table informing his wife he had been called to treat several persons hurt in an accident and might have to go to a hospital;

The statement of Mrs. Budde that she heard the telephone bell ring between 2 and 3 o'clock this morning and her husband answer it.

ROOSEVELT AROUSES IRE OF DEMOCRATS

Called "Snooty" by Some for Spurning Bid to Rally Here Wednesday.

By EDWARD T. FOLLIARD.

Gov. Franklin D. Roosevelt's decision to stay away from the big Jefferson Day rally here next Wednesday has intensified the resentment that certain Democrats hold for him. They think that he is acting "snooty."

It is explained that the New York executive must stay in Albany because of State business. In some quarters, however, this is regarded as a mere subterfuge. The real reason, it is felt, is that he simply doesn't want to mingle with John J. Raskob, Alfred E. Smith and certain other Democratic notables who will gather here. This may be wholly unfair to Roosevelt; nevertheless, that is what is being said.

In the last year or so there have been two big Democratic gatherings in Washington. Roosevelt attended neither of them. He was vitally interested, however, and in each case wielded influence from a distance.

It was the meeting of the Democratic national committee in March a year ago that brought about the first open quarrel between Roosevelt, on the one hand, and Raskob and Smith on the other. This was precipitated by Roosevelt's telegram spiking Raskob's plan to have the committee act on the prohibition question.

Raskob has insisted that he is neutral so far as candidates for the nomination are concerned. His only con-

Nicholas Confers With Carol Today

Is at Palace to Decide on Keeping of Wife or Royal Rights.

Bucharest, April 9 (A.P.).—Prince Nicholas, who aroused the displeasure of his brother, King Carol, by marrying a commoner, arrived from Paris by airplane today and was greeted at the airport by a representative of the king. They motored immediately to the palace.

The return of the prince was a complete surprise except in court circles, where it was revealed that a council of ministers is to be held in the morning at which Nicholas will decide either to renounce his marriage to Mme. Jana Deletj or formally to reliquish all his royal rights. There was no hint today about which course he will select, and Bucharest awaited developments with most tense interest.

Recently the king sent Gen. Condescu to Paris to talk with Nicholas, apparently with the object of effecting a reconciliation.

2 Women and Girl Die As Auto Leaves Cliff

Alpine, N. J., April 9 (U.P.).—Two women and a young girl were killed late today when an automobile plunged over a cliff 300 feet to the old Closter Dock road.

The three had parked their car near the rim of the New Jersey Palisades overlooking the Hudson River. They were sitting in the car when it started rolling and was over the cliff before they could stop it. Only one of the victims was identified after police reached the wrecked car. She was Margaret Hartwell, 40, of Englewood, N. J. The body of the other woman, who appeared to be about 60 years old, and that of the girl, who was about 10, were awaiting identity tonight.

HUGE BEAR RAID IS HELD BALKED BY SENATE QUIZ

Foreign Influences Are Linked With "Black Saturday" Rumor.

PRESIDENT INDORSES PLANS FOR INQUIRY

Whitney, Head of Exchange, Accepts Subpena for Probe Tomorow.

(Associated Press.)

The surprise investigation of the stock market ordered by the Senate banking committee gained momentum yesterday with the formal indorsement of President Hoover.

A whirlwind of rumors and reports revolved about the inquiry as the arrival of Richard Whitney, president of the New York Stock Exchange, was awaited for the opening tomorrow.

One of these rumors, scoffed at by Wall street, but persistently circulated at the Capitol, was that a gigantic bear raid climaxing the eight-day fall in prices on the exchange had been planned for yesterday.

Elated by Quick Rise.

Substantiation of the contention that bears had been active in the price collapse was seen by the elated sponsors of the investigation in the quick upturn on the market yesterday. The senators were not concerned by later losses.

Senator Walcott (Republican), Connecticut, prime instigator of the sudden investigation, made known the formal approval of President Hoover, after talking with him yesterday.

"The President is in full accord with what we have done," said Walcott, "and is absolutely back of us."

Whitney Call Puzzles.

Much mystery still enveloped the causes motivating the surprise subpenaing of Whitney. Committee members pointed to Walcott who went before the emergency meeting Friday with a sheaf of telegrams. These were purported to have told of the threatened raid yesterday. Such terms as "Black Saturday" were mentioned. Foreign influences were mentioned.

Representative LaGuardia, New York Republican independent, told the House yesterday that the New York speculators had threatened a panic if the short selling investigation was carried out.

"They come before us with a threat of a panic on the eve of every vote," said LaGuardia. "They threatened the Senate that if it proceeded with its short selling investigation there would be another panic. I want to charge now that this information being sent throughout the country that this decline is due to the tax bill is absolutely false. I was in New

Smith's Work Praised By Roosevelt in Talk

New York, April 9 (A.P.).—Gov. Franklin D. Roosevelt voiced high praise of former Gov. Alfred E. Smith today when he addressed a luncheon of the Catholic Charities.

Speaking of social welfare work, the governor said: "There is no one individual who has rendered a greater service than my distinguished predecessor, Gov. Smith. His greatest contribution lay in what he has accomplished over a long period of years in making us socially minded—in giving us a better and clearer concept of the command 'Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself.'"

Jugoslavians Want British Prince for King, Is Report

London, April 9 (A.P.).—The Sunday Express said tonight it understood a delegation of Jugoslavian deputies, led by a former cabinet minister, was coming to London to offer the throne of Jugoslavia to Prince Arthur of Connaught, nephew of King George.

The newspaper said King Alexander of Jugoslavia does not feel too secure on his throne. He was understood to have placed £7,000,000 to his credit in London in case of eventualities, the story added.

Worslav M. Petrovich, former attache to the Serbian Legation in London, was quoted as saying that the delegation was headed by Svetozar Pribitchevitch, a former cabinet minister.

Rumors of discontent in Jugoslavia, some going so far as to say that spring might bring serious trouble for King Alexander, have been current for some time.

The king was reported to have lost many faithful supporters after the promulgation of the country's new constitution last September. That document presaged the end of the dictatorship which the king established in January, 1929.

A new Parliament was assembled, and since opposition parties declined

Lindbergh Statement On Payment of Ransom

(United Press.)

Col. H. Norman Schwartzkopf, superintendent of New Jersey State police, last night announced that Col. Lindbergh had authorized him to give out the following statement:

"A ransom of $50,000 was paid to the kidnapers, properly identified as such, upon their agreement to notify him as to the exact whereabouts of the baby.

"The baby was not found at the point designated. Several days were permitted to elapse to give the kidnapers every opportunity to keep their agreement.

"It was not intended to use the numbers on the specie in which the ransom was paid. But inasmuch as the kidnapers have failed to keep their agreement and have not communicated since the ransom was paid, it is felt that every remaining possible means must be utilized to accomplish the return of the baby.

"And to this end the cooperation of the Federal Government was requested in tracing the bills used."

ROME HEARS HINTS OF QUITTING LEAGUE

Veiled Threat Is Read Into Fascist Council's Words on "Problem."

Rome, April 9 (A.P.).—A veiled threat that Italy may consider withdrawing from the League of Nations was seen by newspapers and some diplomats in an announcement today by the Grand Council of Fascism that the "problem of Fascist Italy's position in the league" is to be examined in October.

The Italian press has long complained that the league has been dominated by France and Premier Mussolini frequently has expressed dissatisfaction with the results of the league's international conferences.

These conferences were condemned once again in a communique issued by the grand council at the conclusion of the session, presided over by the premier, which came to an end early today.

The newspaper La Tribuna was particularly outspoken in its criticism of the conferences. The paper said it was "absolutely impossible to continue this international policy that arouses people to rebellion" and it referred to the "detestable and absurd procedure" of the various conferences.

Woman With Gun Guards Bank Bandit

Kansas City, Mo., April 9 (U.P.).—A young woman bandit, her revolver drawn, stood guard today in the lobby of the National Bank & Trust Co. of North Kansas City while her man companion seized approximately $1,000.

The bank's four employes and several customers were forced by the young woman to stand with their hands above their heads. Her companion walked behind the teller's cage and rifled the cash drawer.

Chico Marx, Film Star, Hurt as Autos Collide

Hollywood, Calif., April 9 (A.P.).—Chico Marx, one of the Four Marx Brothers of the stage and screen, received a fractured knee and other injuries in an automobile collision here today. Police said his car struck another machine driven by Max Holcomb, real estate man.

At the Cedars of Lebanon Hospital it was said that several of the comedian's ribs might be broken and that he suffered chest bruises and severe shock when thrown against the steering wheel. The Marx brothers are making a motion picture here.

COL. LINDBERGH REVEALS GANG SWINDLED HIM

He Paid $50,000 Upon Promise of Child's Restoration.

INFANT NOT PLACED AT DESIGNATED SPOT

Federal Help Is Sought After Several Days of Waiting.

BILL NUMBERS SENT TO BANKS OF NATION

Convinced He Was Duped, Father Determined to Track Criminals.

(Copyright, 1932, by the United Press.)

Hopewell, N. J., April 9 (U.P.).—Col. Charles A. Lindbergh revealed late tonight that he had been doublecrossed by the kidnapers of his 21-mnoth-old son soon after paying them $50,000 upon their agreement to notify him as to the baby's exact whereabouts.

After waiting several days and giving them every opportunity to keep their agreement, the distraught colonel turned over to the Treasury Department in Washington the serial numbers of the bills with which he made the payment and the Treasury has now notified bankers throughout the country to be on the lookout for the ransom money.

The colonel's statement indicated he had every confidence that he had dealt with the proper persons, but reflected his feeling of anger at having at having been betrayed at a time when his only desire was for the safe return of his baby.

Federal Help Sought.

Thus the anxious young father, dropping for the moment the attitude of conciliation that had marked his previous public statements on the case, let it be known that he had enlisted the aid of the Federal Government in a determined effort to track the kidnapers down.

Until tonight Lindbergh had promised the kidnapers every opportunity to deal with him direct and had given his assurances that he would do nothing to harm them, if only they would restore the baby.

His anguish and disappointment were evident during the day when he was attempting to keep secret the fact that the Treasury Department was tracing the ransom money. He did not want the kidnapers to know that a record of it had been kept.

Later he explained that he would not have made use of the serial numbers had the kidnapers kept their agreement to give him the exact whereabouts of the baby.

Waited Several Days.

Although the colonel's statement declared that the kidnapers were "properly identified as such," it did not say how the identification had been made or where the payment took place.

Presumably, however, the money was passed somewhere on Cape Cod, as Lindbergh made a secret airplane flight to New England last week-end. His statement mentioned that he waited "several days" for the abductors to make good on their promise.

Immediately after the New England flight things brightened up perceptibly at the Lindbergh estate near here. Lights burned at night in the nursery

One of the most picturesque features of the Masonic parade to be held in Alexandria May 12, on the occasion of the dedication of the George Washington Masonic National Memorial Temple, will be the presence of Knights Templar, the military branch of freemasonry, whose history goes back to the time of the Crusaders. The annual encampment of the Grand Commandery of the State of Virginia will begin its sessions the day following the parade and dedication.

More than 3,000 Knights Templar are expected to be in the line of march, most of them from Virginia, although there will be large delegations from the District of Columbia, Maryland, West Virginia and Pennsylvania.

Among the latest acceptances received by the dedication committee are from Palestine Commandery, of Martinsburg, W. Va., which will have 100 knights in line, and Potomac Commandery, of Charles Town, W. Va., with 60 knights and a band. From the District of Columbia the commanderies expected to participate are Washington, Columbia, Potomac, DeMolay and Orient, while from Maryland will come the Montgomery Commandery of Rockville, and the Maryland, Baltimore, Monumental and DeMolay Commanderies of Baltimore.

Heading the templar division of the parade will be Most Eminent Sir Perry W. Widener, of Los Angeles, Calif., grand commander of the Knights Templar of the United States. The Virginia knights will be headed by Lieut. Gov. James H. Price, grand commander of the Grand Commandery of Virginia.

Roger C. Sullivan, chairman of the music committee, has received acceptances from the Washington Fire Department drum and bugle corps, Capt. O. A. Becker, director, who has advised the committee he will have 40 men in line. Acceptances from other bands and drum corps are being received daily.

INSTITUTE ON PUBLIC AFFAIRS SCHEDULED

University of Virginia to Be Host at Two Weeks' Session in July.

Charlottesville, Va., April 9 (A.P.).—The Sixth Annual Institute of Public Affairs will be held at the University of Virginia during the two-weeks' period beginning Sunday, July 3, it was announced here today.

Dr. Charles G. Maphis, organizer of the institute and its director, has been busy with the program for the 1932 session. It is shaping up with five round table discussion groups already arranged, several others projected, and with plans going forward for a group of nationally known speakers to discuss topics of current interest.

Political problems of the presidential campaign and consequences of the economic depression have been given a place on the tentative program among the subjects to be considered, but Dr. Maphis is awaiting the developments of the next few weeks before concluding arrangements with the speakers who will conduct inquiries into them.

Latin-American Topic.

Unemployment and the readjustment of workers; municipalities, their management and mismanagement; relations with Latin-American countries; county government and reorganization, and religious education are subjects of the round tables for which leaders have already been secured.

What can be done to reeducate and to readjust the worker who has been thrown out of employment, not only by the depression but even before that by the use of new scientific devices and improved machinery will be considered by the group under the leadership of Spencer Miller, jr., secretary of the Workers' Education Bureau.

Loans to governments, investments in South American industries, radical tendencies and the basis of pan-Americanism are among the topics to be sifted by the round table on "Our Latin-American Relations," which will have as leader Prof. Clarence Raring, of Harvard.

The group study of municipal management will be directed by Prof. Thomas H. Reed, of the University of Michigan. The Virginia League of Municipalities will have an active part on the program of this round table, and Morton L. Wallerstein, executive secretary of the league, will assist Dr. Reed.

Religious Round Table.

Prof. Robert H. Tucker, of Washington and Lee University, whose work as chairman of the Virginia Commission on County Government has established his fame as one of the Nation's best informed men on his subject, will lead the group consideration of "The Organization of County Government."

The round table on religious education, which has been well attended in former institute sessions, will be divided into two sections this year. Minor C. Miller, general secretary of the Virginia Council on Religious Education, will lead a general discussion of the subject, while Dr. Henry W. McLaughlin, country church director of the Presbyterian Church in the United States, will head an examination of the educational needs of the rural ministry.

July 4, which falls on Monday, will be observed by a patriotic celebration, for which plans are not yet ready to be announced. The vesper service which opens the institute on the night of July 3 will be conducted by John A. Mackay, who is concluding ten years of Y. M. C. A. work in Latin America to become associated with the Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions.

Campaign Policies.

Democratic and Republican campaign policies will be explained by specially appointed speakers, for whom arrangements are now being made. Dr. Maphis hopes to have authorities analyze the major points of difference in party platforms, but this feature must wait until the issues have been more clearly formulated.

Round tables other than those announced are projected, but the director of the institute does not wish to announce the subjects to be examined by these groups before leaders have been finally secured.

The Institute of Public Affairs was started as an experiment in 1927 with a simple program of seven round tables and eighteen public addresses. Its growth in importance is shown by the fact that last year's session was attended by 594 registered members and 1,184 registered visitors from 37 States and five foreign countries, not including the local residents or students of the University of Virginia summer quarter.

Arlington Bible Class Speaker.

E. T. Franks, chairman of the Federal Board for Vocational Education, is announced as the speaker at the meeting of the men's Bible class of the Arlington Methodist Episcopal Church at the church tomorrow night at 8 o'clock.

YOUTH IS ARRESTED IN FAIRFAX THEFT

Police Say Goodspeed Confessed Burglary of Wycoff Store.

Alfred Goodspeed, 19 years old, of Butts Corner, near Fairfax Station, Va., was arrested yesterday morning by the Fairfax County police and charged with breaking and entering the store of James Wycoff at Fairfax Station the night before. Cigarettes and clothing valued at about $25 were taken, but was recovered from various hiding places yesterday.

According to the police, Mrs. Pete Davis and her son were returning to their home shortly before midnight when the lights of their automobile showed a man with his arms laden with clothing on the road, some distance from the store. When he saw them he dropped his burden and ran into the nearby woods. Mrs. Davis and son stopped to investigate and finding several pairs of new overalls became suspicious. They returned to Fairfax Station and spread the alarm. It was found that two panes of glass had been removed from the rear door of the store and Sheriff E. P. Kirby was notified.

Searching through the woods where the man disappeared a dilapidated hat was found which was later identified as the property of Goodspeed. The youth was arrested for investigation and after questioning it is said that he confessed, telling the police where he had hidden his loot. The police state that the youth is supposed to be out on probation on a District of Columbia charge.

MEMORIAL BRIDGE APPROACH OPENED

Grant Dedicates Arlington's Only Entrance to New Highway Span.

ARLINGTON COUNTY
BUREAU OF THE POST,
Tel. Clar. 509. Clarendon, Va.

In a heavy downpour of rain, Col. U. S. Grant 3d, executive officer of the Arlington Memorial Bridge Commission, officially opened Arlington County's only approach to the bridge yesterday afternoon.

Attending the ceremonies were Roy S. Braden, county manager; Harry A. Fellows, chairman, of the county board; Lyman M. Kelley, and Fred A. Gosnell, members of the board, and Arthur Orr, president of the Arlington County Bicentennial Council, together with a large number of members of the executive committee of the council.

The roadway, which leads from the Arlington National Cemetery, opened by Col. Grant, is but a 30-foot gravel road to serve the thousands of Bicentennial visitors who will come to the county to visit the National Cemetery and other points of interest in northern Virginia.

The opening was made possible through the efforts of officials of the Arlington County Bicentennial Council, who, when learning that the plans were not to have the roadway opened until the permanent surface was finished, made appeals to Col. Grant, citing the need for immediate opening of this approach to the bridge.

The plans of the bridge commission call for the completion of a 60-foot roadway, hard-surfaced, by July 1.

The Arlington and Fairfax Motor Transportation Co. will start operation of its bus line between Washington and Clarendon, Va., by the way of the Highway Bridge, this week, under a certificate granted by the State Corporation Commission of Virginia. The exact date will be announced later. This service will connect at Clarendon with the Arlington & Fairfax Railway cars which will be rerouted to run between Rosslyn and Fairfax on what was, many years ago, the main line of the electric railway. Bus service also will be operated along Garrison road between Clarendon and Lacey, through Ballston, according to an announcement made yesterday by the president, Dr. Julius H. Parmelee.

To Follow Present Route.

This service has been occasioned by the removal of the old electric line terminal at Twelfth street and Pennsylvania avenue, to make way for the new Postoffice Building and by a decision of the transportation company to bring its patrons directly into the business section of Washington by bus rather than inconvenience them by using some distant city electric line terminal. The buses will follow the route of the present A. B. & W. Rapid Transit buses to and from the United Bus Terminal at Tenth and D streets northwest.

The inauguration of bus operation to Clarendon through Hatfield and Lyon Park marks another stage in the transportation development serving the Virginia suburbs. The original company chartered in 1891 as the Washington and Arlington Railway has had a varied and interesting career. The line was extended with Philadelphia capital at various times to serve Ballston, Falls Church, Vienna, and Fairfax. In 1910 a connection having been made to meet the Washington, Mount Vernon and Alexandria Railway at Arlington Junction, and thus into Washington, it was merged with that line as the Washington-Virginia Railway with the further intention of joining all lines under the Washington Utilities Co., a $50,000,000 venture.

Proposed Line Abandoned.

This latter company, whose stated object in its Virginia charter was to build an electric line from Nauck to Manassas, Va., fell through when the newly formed utilities commission balked at its financial arrangements. The Virginia companies then reverted to their original owners under varying degrees of success until in 1927, when the properties were sold at auction by the receivers. The Arlington line was bought by a community of interested citizens and patrons living in Arlington and Fairfax Counties. It is a result of their united efforts that the new bus operation has been started to give the residents of these rapidly growing, nearby Virginia suburbs a continued and reliable service direct to their respective places of business in Washington.

President Parmalee says that the company is equipped with a fleet of ten modern buses, with a capacity of 25 passengers each.

The officers are Julius H. Parmelee, of Falls Church, president; B. M. Smith, of Arlington, vice president; Charles T. Jesse, of Country Club Hills, secretary-treasurer, and P. E. Dewey, superintendent in charge of Operation.

The Arlington County Girl Scouts, numbering more than 250, held a court of awards and a Bicentennial celebration in the auditorium of the Washington-Lee High School yesterday afternoon.

The exercises opened with the playing of the "Star-Spangled Banner" by the Boys Band, sponsored by the Fox Theater, followed by the salute to the flag.

The program was featured by the presentation of an elm tree to the school by Mrs. Stanton C. Moore, district chairman, in behalf of the Scouts. The tree was accepted by Fletcher Kemp, county school superintendent, who congratulated the girls on their excellent showing and progress made.

The awards, consisting of badges, which were presented by Miss Esther Schwartz, former captain of the Aurora Heights Troop, were as follows: First class, second class, business woman, dressmaker, first aid, junior citizen, life saver, needlework, home nurse, gardener, hostess, health and attendance.

Troops represented were Falls Church, Lyon Park, Aurora Heights, Lee Heights, Fort Myer Heights, Cherrydale and Ballston.

Parent-Teachers Meeting.

The Parent-Teacher Association of the Henry Clay School at Lyon Park will hold its monthly meeting Thursday evening in the school auditorium. It will be father's night and Harold Norton, of the safety section, Bureau of Standards, will speak.

FEDERAL FURLOUGHS FAVORED BY HOOVER

over the general salary cut, President Hoover, the Cabinet members sitting with him, and the members of the committee agreed their own rate of pay should be cut.

Under the program the heavy load of the savings would fall upon Federal employes. In arguing for the five-day week and staggered employment system, the White House statement said:

"The reduction of appropriations by the Congress will result in the discharge of many employes unless some provision is made to prevent this contingency. This would permit the retention of trained and qualified employes and provide a somewhat reduced income to some of the Federal staff in lieu of discharging those who can not be retained on full time. The application of this principle into other services will produce effective economies."

Planned for One Year.

The five-day work week and the stagger employment system, as well as other savings from Federal workers, would be effective for only one year.

Other economies agreed upon both by the committee and the President in their original programs, which would also fall upon Federal employes follow:

Suspension for one year of allowances to mail carriers for maintenance of vehicles and other possible items, expected to save $17,500,000.

Suspension for one year of all rights to annual leave with pay and to sick leave with pay to any civilian employe, in excess of two calendar weeks—$35,000,000. They now receive 30 days of each.

Abolition of Saturday half holiday—$10,000,000.

Suspend retirement of superannuated employes—$3,000,000.

Suspend for one year the operation of all provisions for extra pay for overtime and night service for civilian employes—$10,750,000.

Veterans' Savings.

In addition amendments to the veterans' compensation act, including a proposition not to pay allowances to veterans undergoing hospitalization, estimated to save from $39,000,000 to $80,000,000, were tentatively agreed upon.

However, the committee's proposals regarding veterans were estimated to save but $28,000,000. McDuffie expressed the opinion that Congress would not cut the veterans compensation any more than proposed by his group.

Both programs proposed limitations of the pay of emergency officers and of retired Army and Navy officers employed by the Government. The savings was not estimated.

Another far-reaching proposal would suspend for one year the operation of all shipping lines operated by the Shipping Board. Possible saving was placed at $7,500,000. McDuffie said, however, the committee agreed to study this proposal along with its proposition to merge the Shipping Board with the Commerce Department.

Transferring of Funds.

A proposition to authorize for one year heads of departments, with the approval of the budget director, to transfer funds from one activity to another to care for emergencies also was approved.

Besides, Chairman McDuffie, Alabama Democrat, the members of the committee present were Representatives Byrns of Tennessee, Douglas of Arizona, and Cochran of Missouri, Democrats; Wood of Indiana, and Ramseyer of Iowa, Republicans. Williamson (Republican), South Dakota, was out of the city.

Secretaries Mills and Wilbur, Postmaster General Brown and J. C. Roop, budget director, also attended the conference.

Meanwhile, the Senate appropriations committee approved a flat 10 per cent reduction in the $124,000,000 supply bill for the State, Justice, Commerce and Labor Departments, including a lopping of $1,000,000 off the allotment for the Prohibition Bureau.

Garner Hopes for Speed.

At the other end of the Capitol, Speaker Garner expressed to newspapermen the hope that after the conference with the President, "we can put the whole thing (economy program) in one bill and pass it without wasting time."

The House leaders have ordered the legislative supply bill brought up for action next week so that efforts can be made to effect Government salary cuts. Their expenditures committee approved a resolution by Representative Schafer (Republican), Wisconsin, calling upon Attorney General Mitchell to submit his views on a proposal to incorporate all Federal police powers under the Justice Department.

The $98,931,431 independent offices appropriation bill, providing funds for 30 Government agencies next year, was passed yesterday by the House.

The spirit of economy that ushered the bill in also escorted it toward the Senate, for the House took $515,075 off the amount the appropriations committee had recommended. And the committee's figures were $54,948,535 under budget estimates.

White House Statement On Economy Conference

the director of the budget, to transfer some percentage, to be determined, of any specific appropriation to any other specific appropriation within the department or the independent establishment. Such a procedure will add economy and avoid so far as may be possible the necessity for supplemental or deficiency estimates in the next session of Congress. This will not entirely eliminate supplemental and deficiency estimates, but unless such provision is made the inflexibility of reduced appropriations and the emergencies which are certain to arise might result in great public damage and would certainly necessitate more supplemental and deficiency estimates than will be needed if this provision is adopted.

Reduction of expenditure is indirect.

Retirement Savings.

2. Retire superannuated employes. Estimated saving $3,000,000.

3. Suspend for one year the operation of all provisions providing for extra pay for overtime and night service and all automatic promotions provided by law to civilian employes. Estimated saving, $10,750,000.

4. The Congress to take appropriate steps to reduce the congressional, Cabinet, and the President's salary.

Unestimated.

5. Instructed the Secretary of the Navy to appoint a board of naval officers to report upon the closing of all land naval stations which in their view are are not esential to the national defense. The decision of this board to be final and the stations to be closed upon their recommendations.

Saving indeterminate, but probably $3,000,000.

6. Require the transfer of the cost of supporting the Philippine Scouts to the Philippine government.

Estimated saving, $5,000,000.

7. Suspend for one year all payments to the States under the Federal board for vocational education except those for industrial rehabilitation.

Estimated saving, $8,500,000.

Shipping Economy.

8. Suspend for one year the operation of all shipping lines operated by the Shipping Board.

Estimated saving, $7,500,000.

9. Amendments to veterans' legislation, as pointed out by Gen. Hines. The various projects were undetermined, but range in savings from $39,000,000 to $80,000,000 per annum.

10. Limitation of pay of emergency officers and of retired Army and Navy officers employed by the Government.

Saving unesimated.

11. Prohibition against filling civilian vacancies, except key positions. * * *

12. Reduction of printing and paper. * * *

13. Establish fees for service in certain bureaus with view of making them more self-supporting. * * *

14. Discontinue appropriation for Northwest triangle heating plant * * * $750,000.

15. Authorize transfer of fish hatcheries to such States as will accept and operate them. * * *

16. Abolish Army and Navy and Panama transports. * * *

17. Other subjects were referred to later consideration.

18. In considering the savings to be made in the Federal establishment the administration group proposed:

(a) For one year the introduction of a five-day week be authorized for per diem employes and authority for staggering the employment of annual employes by means of furloughs without pay. The reduction of appropriations by the Congress will result in the discharge of many employes unless some provision is made to prevent this contingency. This would permit the retention of trained and qualified employes and provide a somewhat reduced income to some of the Federal staff in lieu of discharging those who can not be retained on full time. The application of this principle into other services will produce effective economies.

Estimated saving, $45,000,000.

Postal Reduction.

(b) Amendments to the law pointed out by the Postmaster General to suspend for one year allowances to mail carriers for maintenance of vehicles and other possible items.

Estimated saving, $17,500,000.

(c) Authorize the suspension for one year of all rights to annual leave with pay and to sick leave to any civilian employe of the Federal Government in excess of two calendar weeks each for annual leave and sick leave, but providing that unused sick leave may accumulate to the credit of the employe in the succeeding year.

Estimated saving, $35,000,000.

3. The economy committee's proposal in lieu of the above was:

(a) Instead og paragraph 2 was a pay cut for one year arrived at by the formula of exempting $1,000 before a cut of 11 per cent.

Estimated saving, $67,000,000.

(b) Do away with Saturday half-holiday.

Estimated saving, $10,000,000.

MONTGOMERY'S TAX SALE IS TOMORROW

1,200 Pieces of Property Are Due to Be Disposed Of at Rockvile.

Montgomery County's annual tax sale will be held tomorrow morning at 10 o'clock, according to J. Forest Walker, county treasurer. Approximately 1,200 pieces of property will be sold on the steps of the courthouse at Rockville, Md., for taxes due the county and State.

Mr. Walker was unable last night to say definitely just how many pieces of property would be sold tomorrow, as his office was crowded yesterday and Friday with delinquent taxpayers avoiding sale of their property. Approximately 2,800 pieces were advertised for sale in county papers. It is possible that the number of pieces sold will not exceed 1,000.

This number is about the average amount of property sold each year. Property owners whose property is sold for taxes have two years from the date of sale to redeem the property by paying the amount of the delinquent taxes plus 10 per cent interest per annum. Failure to pay within two years will result in issuance of a deed to the property to the purchaser by the circuit court. The final date on which payments for the tax sale of 1930 can be made will be next Thursday.

The Montgomery County Civic Federation will meet tomorrow night at the Bethesda Elementary School. Several important matters, including preparations for the annual election, will be discussed.

The Montgomery County grand jury will reconvene Tuesday at Rockville after a recess of several weeks taken to enable the State's attorney, Stedman Prescott, to devote his entire time to trial of cases in circuit court, which was sitting as a criminal court.

The grand jury is understood to be investigating charges of embezzlement preferred against Berry E. Clark, former clerk to the county commissioners. The charges allege a shortage in his accounts more than twelve years ago when he was county treasurer. Mr. Clark has denied that he is guilty of mishandling the county funds and offered to waive immunity to testify before the grand jury, but his counsel advised him to withdraw this offer.

Time for filing candidacy certificates with the supervisors of election at Rockville by persons who are candidates for delegate to the Democratic and Republican State conventions will expire tomorrow at midnight, according to John Jones, clerk to the supervisors. So far but six delegates have filed their certificates, all of them Republicans.

Definite rules and regulations to govern the conduct of the Farm Woman's Market at Bethesda, which is operated under the auspices of the Montgomery County Council of Home Demonstration Clubs, were adopted at a meeting of the marketing committee held at the office of the county home demonstration agent in Rockville. The Farm Woman's Market was opened February 4 and on the eight sales days held so far, county farm women have realized more than $2,000. Sales days are held Saturdays.

The market has grown so that a permanent building for it is to be built and it is hoped that the volume of business will increase to such an extent that a paid manager can be provided. Members of the executive committee are: Mrs. J. D. King, president of the council; Mrs. Frank Gladhill, Mrs. John Darby, Mrs. Rosa Jones, Mrs. A. D. Oursler, Mrs. F. B. Swart, Mrs. Marion Howes, Mrs. Ida Henderson, Mrs. Earl Linthicum, Mrs. A. A. Potter and Miss Blanche Corwin, county home demonstration agent.

RENZULLI CONVICTED AGAIN ON VICE COUNT

Woman Also Is Found Guilty on Charges Growing Out of Tea House Quiz.

The Government registered its second success yesterday in prosecution of cases growing out of the fatal shooting at the Colonial Tea House in Bladensburg last fall when Chester Renzulli was found guilty of violating the Mann act for the second time in less than two weeks. His codefendant, Anna Lutz, was also found guilty on one of the three counts of the indictment against her and Renzulli.

The guilty verdicts were returned when the jury, which had been out for nearly two hours without reaching an agreement, was granted permission by Judge Calvin W. Chestnut, of United States District Court in Baltimore, to return a sealed verdict.

The cases are being prosecuted by Neil Burkinshaw, of Washington, who was appointed special assistant to the Attorney General to investigate vice conditions in Maryland and other Eastern States following the Bladensburg shooting in which one person died and several were seriously wounded. The Mann act cases were made as a result of this inquiry in which Mr. Burkinshaw worked with Federal undercover agents for several months.

The chief witness against the Lutz woman and Renzulli was Josephine Shubert, who figured as the main Government witness in Renzulli's first trial about 10 days ago.

She testified that she had been brought from Philadelphia by Renzulli and Mrs. Lutz and placed in disorderly houses in Baltimore during April and July of last year.

Sentence of Renzulli in this case was deferred until disposition of a third charge of violating the Mann act in alleged conspiracy with several others is brought to trial. This case will be brought into court as soon as possible, according to Mr. Burkinshaw.

Judge Chestnut sentenced him to a 2-year term in the penitentiary after his first conviction.

The sentence of Mrs. Lutz was deferred until next week.

Midcontinent Is Assured Of 76 Cents to $1 Oil

Tulsa, Okla., April 9 (A.P.).—An oil price range of 76 cents to $1 a barrel was assured the midcontinent producing area tonight as two of the last three major companies holding out for lower schedules capitulated to popular demand.

The Standard Oil Co. of Indiana and the Gulf Oil Corporation, through their purchasing subsidiaries, met the 15-cent advance to a top price of $1 a barrel. The Standard of New Jersey alone made no change. Officials of the Carter Oil Co., local subsidiary, said Eastern offices were closed when word came of the increases by the other companies and no action could be taken before Monday.

SENOR DON MIGUEL CRUCHAGA TOCORNAL.

HAD Don Miguel Cruchaga lived in the purple days of the Venetian Republic, he would have been honored with the title of eminentissime. For he is an ambassador of the old school, when diplomacy was based on the law and the law on justice. There is in the nature of the Chilean Ambassador such an air of "sweet resonableness" that he is regarded as one of the outstanding conciliators in the world today.

Since 1926 he has served as president of the German-Mexican, the Spanish-Mexican and the Italian-Mexican Mixed Claims Commissions. Last month he was named umpire in the Panama-United States Mixed Claims Commission.

Long after the famous controversy between the Church and the State had been settled in Mexico, it leaked out accidentally that the role of Ambassador Cruchaga in the settlement had been almost as important as that of American Ambassador Dwight W. Morrow. Ambassador Cruchaga had personally discussed the situation with the Pope and many of his suggestions formed the basis of the compromise.

Few diplomats of any nation have been so honored by their parliaments as the present Chilean Ambassador to the United States, who in 1926, at the conclusion of his remarkable efforts in the Tacna-Arica incident, was unanimously voted "the well merited thanks of the nation."

In the internal politics of his country he has been a notable advocate of humanitarian legislation. His books on international law are standard works of study and reference in universities all over the world. This is the second time he has been Chilean Ambassador to the United States.

BEAR RAID THOUGHT BALKED BY SENATE INQUIRY PLANS

York a week ago and it was generally stated that there would be a decline in security prices during the coming week. There was."

Walcott said he had received numerous telegrams of indorsement of the investigation from bankers and prominent persons. He said the reaction on the stock market was exactly the reverse of what stock exchange officials had predicted.

The program for proceeding with the investigation after hearing Whitney tomorrow was unsettled. Senator Brookhart (Republican), Iowa, who acted as chairman of the committee meeting Friday, said he would insist that the investigation be carried to the limit.

"I am not going to let this proposition merely be used as a club, a political club," said Brookhart. "We have got to go all the way."

Chairman Norbeck, of the committee, said he would insist that the Glass banking bill get the attention of the committee after tomorrow's meeting. Senator Glass (Democratic), Virginia, author of the banking reform measure, said he would ask that course, too.

Whitney Accepts Subpena.

Some doubt was cast on the legality of Friday's special meeting of the committee on the ground that a quorum was not present. Senator Glass, whose proxy was needed to make the quorum, said he had not authorized the proxy, but he added he would not raise the point.

Mr. Whitney accepted by telegraph the subpena issued by the committee. He was directed to bring all records of short selling operations as of the close of business Friday.

The data required of Mr. Whitney included a list of the corporations in whose stock there is a sizable short account, the number of shares of each involved, the names of exchange members through whom the trades were handled, the names of the short sellers and of those who lent the stocks, with the amounts involved for each individual.

It is expected that several days will be required to digest and analyze the mass of data expected to be received from Whitney.

"We expect to follow up this matter," said Walcott.

Senator Walcott communicated several times Friday with Whitney over the telephone. In response to specific requests by the senator for information on those dealing in short selling, the Stock Exchange president declined to answer.

This was one of the factors leading up to the issuing of the subpena. However, Whitney did not defy the committee. He informed Walcott that he did not regard it as ethical to give out information about specific cases without a formal demand by the Senate. He preferred to submit all the facts, if the Senate insisted, and let is choose what was wanted.

Whatever there may have been to reports about a Saturday raid on the weakened stock market, there was no doubt but that this was the motivating factor leading up to the sudden decision of the banking committee to start its inquiry.

In the calm of reflection yesterday, several members voiced the view that they had been stampeded. However, since the inquiry has been finally put under way, they are all determined to see it through.

Jolt to Bears.

New York, April 9 (A.P.).—Stock market bears who were complacently beginning to believe that the threat of a senatorial investigation had been a bluff, received a jolt today.

There was a brief but feverish flurry to cover short contracts when the stock market opened, as bears had learned overnight that the investigation was actually to begin on Monday.

But nothing in the nature of a bear stampede occurred, and after stocks had been bid up $1 to $5 a share in the first few minutes, it became apparent that the stubborn liquidation of the past several days was still in progress, and advances were more than half lost. Many prominent shares, however, closed with gains of $1 to $2 or more.

Information Prepared.

In the meantime, the Stock Exchange was busily preparing the information which Richard Whitney, president of the exchange, was requested to provide when he appears as the first witness before the Senate committee on banking and currency on Monday.

The exchange ordered all members to submit detailed reports of short accounts, including names of owners, daily until further notice, starting with yesterday's transactions. Since January, brokers had been reporting only the net changes in short accounts from day to day.

Other information requested included copies of all messages sent over brokerage wires yesterday. While officials of the exchange declined to comment on this order, considerable significance was seen in it, in connection with Washington reports of rumors that a powerful bear raid had been planned for today.

To Clear Up Raid Rumors.

While brokers were inclined to scoff at the bear raid report, it was pointed out that the brokerage messages would show if anything had been going on in the way of irresponsible rumor mongering. Wall street has grown touchy on the subject of rumors since a fallacious report of an American bank suspension was published in Paris this week, coincident with bear selling of the dollar in the foreign exchange markets.

The announcement of the Washington investigation was nicely timed, if senators were hopeful of bringing an interruption to the shrinkage of security values, for it coincided with publication of a bullish winter wheat crop report bringing a brisk rise in the Chicago pit, and came at a time when Wall street was anxiously waiting for some unexpected break in the news to bring a turn.

In view of the very duration of the decline—the market had registered new lows for eight successive sessions—Wall street was beginning to feel that a turn would have to come soon.

MURDER OF GROCER LAID TO 2 DRY MEN

U. S. Agents Are Accused of Killing Merchant Who Suspected Holdup.

Dallas, Tex., April 9 (A.P.).—Two Federal prohibition agents were charged with murder today for the slaying of Marion McGlothlin, 50, proprietor of a cross-roads gasoline station and grocery.

The agents, N. D. Heaton and L. C. Smith, declined to make a statement, saying Federal regulations silenced them.

William McGraw, State district attorney, who brought the charges, declared: "I find that an honest, law-abiding, peaceful citizen has been ruthlessly murdered."

McGlothlin was shot to death last night and his wife wounded in the hand when they pointed firearms at the agents in the belief they were holdup men.

Couple Met Agents.

The shooting occurred as the officers were arresting Lester Cox and his wife, Ruby. The Coxes had met the agents at McGlothlin's business place by appointment after the Government men had visited Cox's home in an attempt to buy liquor.

Mrs. Cox was alleged to have displayed a pistol and to have been disarmed.

Thinking a robbery was occurring, Mrs. McGlothlin seized a pistol from behind a counter and pointed it at one of the agents. He shot the weapon from her hand. The bullet tore off several of her fingers.

Dry Man Opens Fire.

McGlothlin obtained a shotgun. The other agent opened fire. McGlothlin fell with three bullet wounds in his body, the shotgun discharging harmlessly as he pitched to the floor. In the excitement Cox escaped.

After the shooting, Mrs. Cox said, the agents brought Mrs. McGlothlin outside to their car. "One of them," she said, "told Mrs. McGlothlin to stop her noise or he would shoot her again. He told me to keep her quiet or he would shoot me."

She further declared that one of the men "was drunk and when he took a drink of whisky at my house it made him sick."

Released From Custody.

Mrs. Cox was released from custody. District Attorney McCraw refused to release the agents upon their own recognizance. He said he would demand high bail bond.

Smith, one of the agents, was tried and convicted of manslaughter in 1921, being given a two-year suspended sentence, after the slaying of Frank Johnson.

While the agents would not issue a statement, they were overheard to tell McCraw they had a search warrant for Cox's place but none for that of McGlothlin. Their response to McCraw's interrogation as to drinking was not heard.

New Mine Trouble Looming on Visit

Students and Instructors Try to Get Lawyer to Accompany Them.

Corbin, Ky., April 9 (A.P.).—Pending further efforts to obtain an attorney to accompany them into the southeastern Kentucky coal fields, a party of five students and instructors from Commonwealth College, Mena, Ark., decided to spend tonight in Corbin and proceed to Pineville, in Bell County, tomorrow.

Lucien Koch, director of the college and leader of the group, said they preferred having an attorney with them to advise them as to the law and to serve as a witness if trouble developed. The first information that trouble might develop on the students' entry into the coal mine area was given in information from Barbourville that a crowd of 20 or 30 men had assembled on the outskirts of town and remained there all morning.

New York, April 9 (A.P.).—The American Civil Liberties Union will answer the challenge made in an open letter by Walter B. Smith, Bell County, Ky., prosecutor, by sending a delegation into mine dispute districts the week of April 18, it was announced today.

POSSEMAN IS KILLED AS OUTLAW ESCAPES

Floyd, Oklahoma Desperado, Trailed to Home of Kin After Fleeing Trap.

Tulsa, Okla., April 9 (A.P.).—Tulsa officials reported a heavy concentration of officers in the vicinity of Earlsboro, Okla., tonight on the trail of Charles A. (Pretty Boy) Floyd, long-sought Oklahoma outlaw and killer.

Floyd eluded a trap set for him early today at the home of his father-in-law, Ben Hargraves, near Bixby, which resulted in the slaying of E. A. Kelly, former sheriff of McIntosh County.

Detectives who participated in the unsuccessful attempt to capture the outlaw said they were convinced it was Floyd who shot Kelly, leader of the posse, and that Floyd was accompanied by his lieutenant, George Birdwell.

They said he had been trailed to the vicinity of a brother's home at Earlsboro.

Kelly was shot down in a lane near the Hargraves home when he stepped into the bright lights of an approaching automobile and commanded the driver to halt.

Two farmers, whose names were withheld, but who had been enlisted as possemen, said there was a burst of pistol shots from the automobile and that Kelly fired a round from his submachine gun as he fell mortally wounded.

The automobile turned in the narrow lane, dragging down part of a wire fence, and sped off in the darkness.

The officers had information Floyd planned to visit his wife at the home of her father last night, and it was on the strength of the tip that the ambush was planned.

Mrs. Floyd went to the Hargraves house last night and remained there during the day.

Missing Chicago Doctor May Be Gang's Victim

Chicago, April 9 (U.P.).—Dr. A. E. Budde, prominent North Chicago physician, disappeared today after being summoned to the scene of "an automobile accident." Police and his wife feared he had been kidnaped. No ransom demand was received, however.

Police suggested it was possible that Dr. Budde was tricked into leaving his home to care for a wounded gangster and was being held lest he carry out the duty of reporting such an incident.

HURLEY CALLS WAR ON SLUMP SUCCESS

Tide Has Turned in Hoover Drive on Depression, Secretary Says.

Indianapolis, Ind., April 9 (U.P.). The administration's battle against the depression is still raging, but "the tide has turned," Secretary of War Patrick J. Hurley tonight told the Indiana Republican Editorial Association here.

The Secretary of War, recognized as one of President Hoover's outstanding political spokesmen, extolled the President as the author of a broad-gauge plan of recovery. He answered charges from certain Democratic spokesmen that the administration's relief program was designed to benefit big business by saying that big corporations must be aided in order to protect their millions of workmen.

For instance, Mr. Hurley said, large amounts of insurance funds, backing 68,000,000 policies, are invested in railroads, and these funds must be safeguarded.

Holding that the administration had rendered vast direct aid to the small citizen, Mr. Hurley said that under existing relief projects a total of $1,000,000,000 will be made available to American agriculture.

Comparing Mr. Hoover with a general on the battlefield, Mr. Hurley said the President had directed his campaign against depression toward three objectives:

1. To prevent social upheavals as the result of the economic crisis.
2. To reduce distress to a minimum.
3. To avert a Nation-wide panic by pouring new strength into the economic system.

Bertram H. Fancher, 66, Y. M. C. A. Official, Dies

Pound Ridge, N. Y., April 9 (A.P.).—Bertram H. Fancher, 66, former vice president of the Fifth Avenue Bank of New York City and for nineteen years treasurer of the National Y. M. C. A., died today. He retired from his banking affiliations in 1928 after having been a vice president and director since 1906.

Since 1928 Fancher had been a member of the corporation of the National Council of Congregational Churches.

NAVY REBELS DRIVEN FROM ECUADOR FORT

Mutineers Escape in Boat, Firing on Loyal Troops in Flight.

Guayaquil, Ecuador, April 9 (A.P.). Government forces succeeded today in driving navy mutineers out of the fort at Punta Piedra, but allowed the rebels to escape on a gunboat.

The rebels, in possession of both ships of the Ecuadorean navy, the gunboats Tarqui and Cotopaxi, held off the government forces in the little motorship Colon with gunfire as they fled.

With darkness growing, all the federal troops except a garrison left at Punta Piedra returned to Guayaquil on the Colon, avoiding a miniature naval battle off the island of Puna in the Gulf of Guayaquil.

Rebels who were taken prisoners said their side was demoralized and the authorities said they believed the mutiny was ended. An officer said that when he left Puna the gunboats had stopped the Chilean steamer Guayas, apparently to obtain fuel for flight.

Loyal troops succeeded in besting the rebels at Punta Piedra, which was seized two days ago at the same time that the two gunboats were taken over, by a smart maneuver.

Fifty marines opened rifle fire on the fort this morning, putting up a demonstration that occupied the attention of the defenders. Meanwhile a hundred men were landed from a ship in the river and after proceeding through a swamp below the fort they attacked the garrison from the rear. Casualties were reported to have been light.

While the skirmish was going on Ildefonso Mendoza, leader of the rebellion, led his forces out of the fort and steamed up the river on the gunboats.

Crazed Veteran Attacks Former Representative

Searcy, Ark., April 9 (A.P.).—Stephen Brundidge, former member of Congress and author of the Arkansas primary election law, was attacked on a street here today and seriously wounded by Frank Covington, 40, World War veteran, who, officers said, is mentally unbalanced. A deep gash was cut in Judge Brundidge's cheek and his head was badly bruised. On account of his advanced age—75—physicians regarded the wounds as serious. Covington was placed in jail.

Mr. Brundidge served in Congress from the Second Arkansas District from 1897 to 1909.

Recently there have been student demonstrations in Jugoslavia, led by Serbs, Montenegrins and Bosnians, formerly among the king's most loyal subjects.

Some of the people were aroused by the speech from the throne which was read at the opening of the new Parliament. It omitted any mention of a return to liberty, free speech and a free press, summing up the dictatorship by remarking that the king was sure everybody had been glad to live under his regime during the last three years.

ILLINOIS PRIMARIES NEAR HEATED CLOSE

Voting Tuesday on Presidency Choices Subordinated to Local Fights.

Chicago, April 9 (A.P.).—Illinois' tempestuous primary campaign, now drawing to a close, is a strictly "family" affair. Outside issues, including the presidential race, have little or no place in Tuesday's election.

The lack of contests in the presidential preferential primaries, which are not binding, has subordinated interest in the election of delegates to the national conventions.

United States Senator James Hamilton Lewis is the lone entry in the Democratic presidential primary while former Senator Joseph I. France, of Maryland, is without opposition in the Republican race.

But heated gubernatorial contests in both major parties have kept the primary from being anything but placid. Five major candidates are seeking the Republican nomination while three prominent Democrats are aspiring for their party's favor.

Republican Candidates.

Tax reform, reapportionment of the State Legislature, prohibition, highway construction and banking laws are the chief issues over which they have wrangled.

In the Republican field Homer N. Custer, former State treasurer and candidate of Gov. Louis L. Emmerson, has the indorsement of the Anti-saloon League. The four other major candidates are either out and out wet or moist. They are Edward J. Brundage, Chicago, former attorney general; Len Small, twice governor; Oscar E. Carlstrom, now serving his second term as attorney general, and William H. Malone, former head of the State Tax Commission.

Each has a pet grievance against at least one of the others to put heat into the campaigning.

Democratic Control Sought.

The Democratic gubernatorial race has been no less bitter. In it is involved the future control of the party in Cook County and, perhaps, the State. Chicago's mayor, Anton J. Cermak, brought about the entry of Probate Judge Henry Horner, of Cook County, in opposition to his old foe, National Committeeman Michael L. Igoe. Cermak and Igoe have struggled since the death of George Brennan for the leadership of the Democrats. The two then entered full slates in the State election as well as in Cook County.

A third Democratic candidate, Bruce Campbell, of East St. Louis, has strong down-State support.

Regardless of the outcome of the gubernatorial race, Senator Lewis apparently is assured a solid delegation in his favor at the national convention.

Delegates from down-State districts to the Republican convention are expected to follow the leadership of Gov. Emmerson. In Cook County, however, a struggle is being waged by the county chairman, Bernard Snow, to bring about the election of delegates pledged against the renomination of President Hoover and in favor of prohibition repeal.

Quizzing of Raskob Is Refused by Court

Questioning of Kelly Also Stayed in "Tiger Room Note Suit."

New York, April 9 (A.P.).—Efforts of two defendants in the "tiger room note suit" to question John J. Raskob, chairman of the Democratic national committee, before their trial were stayed today by a court order. The order also stayed the examination of Orie Kelly, president of the County Trust Co., of which Mr. Raskob is a director.

The bank is suing Timothy J. Mara, sports promoter, and Patrick F. Kenny, Yonkers contractor, for payment of notes totaling $70,000 which they signed during the 1928 presidential campaign. The defendants state that they were induced to sign the notes by Mr. Raskob, Mr. Kelly and others; that the money all went into the Democratic campaign chest; that they received none of it, and that they were assured they would not have to pay. They said the procedure was designed to "cover up" an illegal contribution to the fund by the bank.

Earlier this week the bank applied for a summary judgment which was denied. The bank then appealed to the appelate division, and for this reason the stay of the examinations was granted.

Hoover Democrats Lose Fight in Texas

Ultra-Drys Fail in Effort to Prevent Pledge of Party Loyalty.

Dallas, Tex., April 9 (A.P.).—"Ultra-dry" Texas Democrats, credited with carrying Texas for Hoover in 1928, today failed in the first round of an effort to prohibit the State executive committee from requiring voters in precinct conventions to give a loyalty pledge.

District Judge Robert B. Allen held that the executive committee had not exceeded its authority in requiring the pledge. He dismissed a suit for mandamus, sought by Thomas B. Love, of Dallas, leader of the 1928 Hoover-Democrats.

Mr. Love, who argued that it was unlawful to compel voters to sign a statement they would support Democratic nominees for President and Vice President, promptly filed an appeal to the State Supreme Court. He won a similar Supreme Court decision in 1928, and was permitted to become a candidate for governor of Texas despite his refusal to sign a pledge to support Al Smith, Democratic presidential nominee.

Texas Member Seeks Congress Salary Cuts

Reductions in the salaries of representatives, senators and members of the Cabinet was asked yesterday in an amendment proposed to the legislative appropriations bill by Representative Joseph J. Mansfield (Democrat), Texas.

The amendment would reduce pay of the Vice President and Speaker of the House from $15,000 to $13,400. Members of Congress would be cut from $10,000 to $8,400.

On the pan, politicians paradoxically listened to personal parody of their prerequisites when the Gridiron Club presented progress in politics and a prophetic preview of the presidential conventions at its annual spring dinner last night.

Living lights from literature lingered by the footlights lisping lucid lines. Mother Goose's children, dressed for the contemporary scene, characters from the "Arabian Nights" and "Alice in Wonderland," with cohorts consisting of Diogenes, Calamity Jane Democracy, the Shadow, and even Gunga Din, the water tender, whispered words of wisdom.

The President, Speaker Garner and members of the Cabinet and the Diplomatic Corps were included in the distinguished guests who heard the Gridiron Club reverify its record of revelation in dialogue, drama and dreams, songs and syncopation.

Keynote Address.

The keynote was struck by Walker S. Buel, of the Cleveland Plain Dealer, as he was inaugurated president of the Gridiron Club. Mentioning the centennial anniversary of political conventions and the Bicentennial, his remarks passed to the "quadrennial assurances of at least two political parties that the minarets of Bagdad are just around the corner."

Linking the noble experiment with handsprings, economy with commissions and more commissions, and Geneva with resolutions and resolutions, he remarked upon the singular appropriateness of the parties' choice of the Windy City for their parliamentary proceedings.

As the last echoes of his voice had died in the Willard Hall, an off-stage crash centered attention to cries of "Down with Garner," "Soak the rich," and "You're a liar."

Crash Is Explained.

Inquiring for an explanation of the bombast, the presiding officer received this answer: "That, Mr. President, is the Democratic House of Representatives rehearsing for the Chicago convention."

Then, forsooth, there commenced a charade-parade. Across the stage trooped Mother Goose and brood, little Alice G. O. P. lost in the woods of wet and dry, Republican national committee artists depicting Mr. Hoover as a composite of Daniel Boone, Trader Horn and Casey Jones, Calamity Jane Democracy with her quibbling swains, Rolla Franklin Rosebud, Big Shot Al Smith, Long Shot Baker, One String Ritchie and Alfalfa Bill, and trailing in the rear, John Digges Taxpayer.

Others in the mazed march of moment were Secretary Stimson and his pupils in the Stimson Select School for Careermen, and early arrivals at the Chicago conventions, including Senator Borah, Walter Newton, John J. Raskob, armor-plated Southern delegates and a host of others.

Opening Song.

The customary opening song to the President of the United States, sung to the tune of "Can't We Talk It Over," ran:

"Soon the candidates will be selected,
Soon a President will be elected;
And as campaign time draws near
There are things we want to hear."

Then the chorus:

"Can't we talk it over,
Let's talk it over,
Before the evening is through.
As we sit together,
Let's figure whether
We've told the right thing to you.
We sing our songs and tell our stories in jest,
But when it's done we yield to our guest.
Can't we talk it over,
Before it's over?
Before you leave us tell the voter,
Let's talk it over now!"

In beaver hats, and stocks and over whisky glasses delegates in a hotel room, as of 1832, debated such obsolete problems as Tammany's attitude toward Little Van, the votes to be gleaned from denouncing the bankers, Federal road aid, nullification and Federal economy, as they viewed with alarm or pointed with pride.

Presto—sesame—and the scene was a modern hotel in Chicago, where delegates in straw hats and palm beach suits pointed with pride and viewed with alarm the votes to be gleaned from denouncing bankers, and down through the list—over their whisky glasses.

Seek Barmaid's Hand.

Rollo Franklin Rosebud was observed all alone sipping his strawberry sundae in Ye Bucket of Blood Ice Cream Shoppe of Campaign Gulch. Calamity Jane Democracy indolently wielded the bar rag, while at the other extremity of the bar, Big Shot Al with his pals, Long Shot Baker, Alfalfa Bill, Disappearing Jack Garner and One String Ritchie, sharing a vanilla soda, plotted to win Rosebud's claim for the barmaid's hand.

Then the still air seemed to take a rural aspect as the bull market was brought up along with Goosey Goosey Garner, all under the auspices of the Great American Public, with Mother Goose as the pinch hitter.

There was a pastoral song:

"The farmer's gone to hell,
The farmer's gone to hell,
Higho, the cherrio, the farmer's gone to hell."

Again the scene shifted with an almost supernatural magic. Borah, Newton and Raskob arriving in Chicago with two delegates from the South wearing "owah Chicaago pajawmas," or coats of mail.

Phones White House.

It was a hotel lobby. There was no reservation for Borah as the clerk said he did not know which convention he would attend. Newton phoned the White House that Borah had arrived to write the platform. The telephone sizzled and sparked and smoked. Newton replied, "Yes sir, I understand. The lake is right out in front."

When Raskob had phoned [illegible] Shouse to ask for some statistics on the total of the Democratic victory fund drive, he was immediately prompted to cancel 19 of the 20 rooms he had reserved.

Meanwhile the Southerners sang, to the tune of "Chinatown:"

"Here we are in Chicago,
On the old lake shore,
Meeting place of long ago,
Where machine guns roar,
No place else will do as well,
When the spring is spent,
As the home of Al Capone,
To name our President."

The scene shifter again switched the scene, and Little Alice G. O. P. was seen lost while seeing the sights of the Prohibition Forest.

Tweedle Brothers.

Perchance, luckily perhaps, she met and sought advice from the Tweedle brothers, Tweedlefess, chairman of the Republican national committee, and Tweedlebrown, who may manage Mr. Hoover's campaign.

Walter Tweedlebrown told her that Mr. Hoover was wet. Simeon Tweedlefess assured her that Mr. Hoover was dry. More than ever confused and puzzled over how the disagreeing Tweedle brothers could both support Mr. Hoover, Little Alice G. O. P. learned that:

"If you were a Tweedle brother from Ohio,
You'd be for Hoover wet or dry-o."

Before, a "rip-snorting, wet-drinking, delegate from South of the Mint Julep-Dixon Line had converted "Sleepy Time Down South" into "Voting Time Down South."

Then the ominous tones of The Shadow, over a loud-speaker, asked for a solution to the "Billion Dollar Mystery," which was concerned with the finding of John Digges Taxpayer "just around the corner" with a "busted budget."

Busy Detecting.

Ogden Decimal Mills, his uncle, and Charles Hooey Hilles learned of the tragedy from Roundsman Jim Watson. They summoned Inspector Garner, of Blarney Yard. He and Sergt. Rainey were detecting when the victim appeared.

He pronounced all guilty including Uncle Ogden, Garner, High Finance, Hold-up Bonus and Stick-em-up Farmer. Then a messenger interrupted with a wire from Representative LaGuardia advising that Digges' troubles would end if he would simply "give everybody everything without taking anything from anybody."

Aladdin slippered upon the stage and rubbed a mazda. There came a veritable flood of coins and the Oriental prince explained: "I'm Sheriff Farley, of New York, ain't it a wonderful trick."

The diplomats saw themselves lampooned in the Stimson Select Finishing School in which embryo career men, carrying teacups and wafers, and wearing cutaways, white spats, and gardenias, proved their proficiency by their meaningless answers to their instructor's questions and by their glibness in saying "yes, yes, yes."

The trials of a member of Congress were epitomized in a scene wherein a harassed member of the House undertook, futilely, to dictate explanatory replies to frenzied and critical constituents.

Gilt Edge Era.

The gilt edge era was resurrected to the refrain of "Dreaming," as a big businessman consulted the ticker tape of peak prices and learned of huge Treasury surpluses permitting further reduction of income taxes.

Other scenes portrayed the changed control in the House, with the eclipse of the former Republican leaders, Bertrand Snell and John Q. Tilson, and the emergence of Representative LaGuardia; the politically pursued power trust, which demonstrated "Mourning Becomes Electric" in black crepe, and furious shadow boxing by a Democrat who explained that he was sparring with the tariff—knew that he was not hitting the target but felt obliged to go through the motions every four years.

Diogenes strolled in, still on his famous quest. He was asked if he sought any person at the Gridiron dinner. "No. I am just passing through" was his enigmatic reply.

Hoover Speaks.

When mirth had died and scintillating satire stopped and as the occasion neared the close, President Hoover, as tradition decreed, was called upon to speak.

Under the Gridiron rule, "that reporters are never present," his words and those of Senator James Hamilton Lewis, the only other speaker, must pass unnoted in the record.

Lighter aspects were banished when the Gridiron Club cast tribute to two of its most distinguished members who died recently, John Philip Sousa and Richard Victor Oulahan.

The guests included:

The President of the United States.
The Speaker of the House of Representatives.
The Ambassador of Germany.
The Ambassador of Cuba.
The Secretary of the Treasury.
The Attorney General.
The Postmaster General.
The Secretary of the Navy.
The Secretary of the Interior.
The Secretary of Agriculture.
The Secretary of Commerce.
The Secretary of Labor.
The Minister to Canada.
The Minister of Panama.

Roosevelt "Slur" Denied by Murray

"Alfalfa Bill" Completes Nebraska Campaign; Oregon Is Next.

Kearney, Nebr., April 9 (A.P.).—Gov. W. H. "Alfalfa Bill" Murray today said his Nebraska campaign for the Democratic presidential nomination "seems like a vacation as compared to being governor of the State of Oklahoma." After an address at North Platte tonight he planned to go to Oregon to campaign.

He again referred to reports of his address at Norfolk and said he believed he had been misquoted in reports that a $50,000 campaign fund had been sent into Nebraska to be spent in behalf of Gov. Franklin D. Roosevelt. The Oklahoma governor said that immediately after his Norfolk address a member of his party had expressed the belief that the crowd misunderstood the statement.

"What I did say was that four years ago the Democratic national central committee spent $50,000 in Nebraska in an effort to elect their candidate and I wonder how much they will spend in their efforts to bring about the nomination of Mr. Roosevelt," Murray told newspapermen.

Akron Plans Undecided After Trip to Coast

(Associated Press.)

Secretary Adams said yesterday the Navy was still undecided about definite plans for the airship Akron, after it reaches the West Coast. The ship will make the trip primarily for maneuvers with the fleet. The Secretary said the question of its proceeding to Honolulu had not been definitely decided.

Rear Admiral William A. Moffett, chief of naval aeronautics, has urged the trip to Hawaii, but the plan has encountered some opposition among other high officials on the ground it would be "unnecessary." The Western flight is set for early in May, but at the Navy Department it was said no more specific time can now be [illegible]

FUTURE OF TAX BILL RESTS ON DUTY ROW

Senator Thomas Warns That Congress May Be Kept Here All Summer.

(Associated Press.)

The tariff row hung forebodingly over the future of the billion-dollar revenue bill yesterday in the Senate.

A warning that Congress would be here all summer if the House provision levying an import duty on oil was eliminated was sounded by Senator Thomas (Democrat), Oklahoma, in a statement off the floor.

The group opposed to tariffs in the bill was just as insistent that the door be closed to all import levies in the revenue bill lest the contest force a lengthy dispute.

Senator Tydings (Democrat), Maryland, said he would seek a vote early this week on his resolution to have the Senate instruct the finance committee to excluded all tariff rates from the tax measure. He believes he can muster a majority.

Adoption of the resolution, however, would not prevent the offering of tariff amendments on the floor and Senate leaders were seeking a way out of the threatened storm. One suggestion under advisement is to have the House put through separate legislation on oil and coal.

Meanwhile, a tariff combination is forming in the Senate, including the backers of import duties on copper, lumber, wood pulp and manganese. United with the group favoring the oil and coal duties it represents formidable strength.

BIG RANSOM PAID; BABY STILL HELD

from which the baby was kidnaped. Every one seemed most optimistic. On Tuesday Lindbergh helped troopers fight a brush fire near the house. He appeared to be in a jovial mood, and predictions were general that the return of the baby was imminent.

Observers tonight said they believed the collapse of the negotiations materially nicreased the hazards of recovering the baby. Building up a contact again may be even more difficult now that the colonel's confidence in the kidnapers had been destroyed by their failure in the first trial.

Credence to "Jafsie" Notes.

The "Jafsie" notes, which have appeared from time to time in New York newspapers, were given larger credence today as a result of the sudden turn the case has taken, since their tone coincides with collapse of this week's negotiations.

The "Jafsie" notes, early in the case, were in this tenor:

"Money is ready. Agree your terms. Jafsie."

In the last few days, however, they have been in a different vein, one of them having read:

"What is wrong? Have you crossed me? Give better directions."

Many persons have considered these sententious advertisements authentic, the prevailing opinion being that they have been inserted by some person authorized to negotiate for the baby's return.

Norfolk Negotiator Departs.

Norfolk, Va., April 9 (U.P.).—Rear Admiral Guy H. Burrage tonight mysteriously left the city and his whereabouts could not be learned. He had been acting as spokesman for three Norfolk men negotiating for the return of the Lindbergh baby, but John Hughes Curtis, chief of the negotiators, substituted for Admiral Burrage tonight, and in answer to a press question said Admiral Burrage had left the city. He declined to say where the retired naval officer had gone or when he would be back.

"Do you consider the prospects for the return of the Lindbergh baby to his parents as a result of the Norfolk negotiations in as favorable a light as you did prior to Mr. Curtis' last trip away from the city?" Curtis was asked.

"Yes," he answered.

(Associated Press.)

Earlier yesterday it was learned in Washington that a circular of nearly 60 pages giving the serial numbers, kind of currency and denominations of five, ten and twenty dollar notes, had been distributed through the country by the Treasury asking that it be notified if any of the bills are received.

This information, however, was withheld by press associations on the ground that the efforts of the Treasury might be injurious to the Lindbergh search if published.

The circular, directed chiefly to banks and firms where large amounts of money pass over the counter, was sent from the office of Walter O. Wood, Treasurer of the United States. The serial numbers given in the circular are for bills totaling $50,000: half in twenties; $15,000 in tens, and $10,000 in fives.

Text of Circular.

The Woods' circular said:

April 6, 1932.

"To the president: (of the banking institution addressed).

"There is inclosed a list of the serial numbers of certain United States notes of the $5 denomination, United States gold certificates of the $10 denomination, and United States gold certificates and Federal Reserve notes of the $20 denomination.

"If any of the currency so listed is received by your bank it will be appreciated if you will take note of the source from which you received it and immediately notify the Treasurer of the United States, Washington, D. C., by telegraph.

"Very truly yours,
W. O. WOODS.
Treasurer of the United States."

NOT A THRILL FOR LILYAN

ROOSEVELT'S RALLY DAY BID REFUSAL STIRS DEMOCRATS

cern, he says, is the success of the Democratic party in November.

That, it is suggested, is why he decided to stage the big "unity" rally here on the birthday of Thomas Jefferson, founder of the party.

According to the announcement on March 9, it was to be the "greatest Democratic demonstration Washington has ever known, except, of course, the inauguration of a Democratic President."

The rally was to have four objects, as follows:

First, to honor the memory of Thomas Jefferson and Woodfow Wilson.

Second, "to demonstrate Democracy's unity of purpose and the quality of leadership it offers in its essay to assume responsibility for the National Government."

Third, to survey the political situation in each of the 48 States.

Fourth, to receive reports on the $1,500,000 "victory fund" drive.

The point that was always stressed was the second one. Raskob, anxious to demonstrate the "unity" in the party, wanted to stage a love feast at which all of the presidential possibilities would be shown breaking bread together.

So anxious was Raskob to have Roosevelt present that he called him on the telephone to extend the invitation. Roosevelt agreed to come.

Arranged for Speeches.

Having obtained his acceptance, Raskob assigned a star role to Roosevelt. He would speak at the Jefferson dinner Wednesday night. Al Smith, his rival, also would speak. Here would be good political drama, good "unity" stuff. It would show the two headliners in the race—Roosevelt, the leading candidate, and Smith, the man accused of trying to "stop" him—demonstrating to the country that the Democratic party comes first, and their individual ambitions second.

The trouble may have been that the proposed drama was too good.

At any rate, it became known a few days ago that Roosevelt wasn't coming. There was something strange even about this. No formal announcement was made by Roosevelt; the first intimation that he wasn't coming appeared in the newspapers.

Known Three Weeks Ago.

At the headquarters of the Democratic national committee here, nothing was known about a change in Roosevelt's plans. And yet, it now develops, there were people here who did know about it three weeks ago.

As has been said, the explanation given is that State business—a committee meeting—will hold Roosevelt in Albany. That his physical condition has nothing to do with it is shown by the fact that over the week-end he plans to go to St. Paul, Minn., for a speaking engagement.

The show here on Wednesday is going ahead, even if Hamlet is missing from the cast, and there is every evidence that it will bring to Washington one of the greatest gatherings of Democrats the city has ever seen.

Others to Be Present.

Al Smith will be here, and so will the two men who were nominees before him—James M. Cox, of Ohio, and John W. Davis, of New York and West Virginia. Among others in the race for the nomination this time who will be here are Gov. Albert C. Ritchie of Maryland, former Gov. Harry Byrd of Virginia, Newton D. Baker of Ohio, Gov. George White of the same State, and Speaker John N. Garner.

Gov. William H. Murray, of Oklahoma, and Melvin Traylor, of Texas, Kentucky and Illinois, won't be here. However, they made known their inability to come at the very outset. Former Senator James A. Reed, of Missouri, also will be missing. He recently experienced a serious illness and is now convalescent.

Gov. Roosevelt probably will send a telegram, and when it is read at the banquet there probably will be great handclapping and cheering. Some of those present may not applaud and cheer with the same gusto as the others. These will be the people who think that Roosevelt is "snooty."

Train Kills Two Sisters As One's Foot Is Caught

Woburn, Mass., April 9 (U.P.).—Two elderly spinsters, Miss Marjorie McCormick, 66, and her sister, Mary, 69, were killed instantly by a passenger train here tonight when one caught her foot in the rails at a grade crossing and the other tarried in a frantic rescue attempt.

The bodies were dragged along the rails and deposited almost directly in front of a group of persons waiting to board the Boston-bound train at Woburn Station.

Take Care of the "Little Things"

Probably the BIG THINGS in your life will take care of themselves if YOU take care of the "LITTLE THINGS."

It is surprising how an infinitesimally small CAUSE will produce a gigantic EFFECT.

It is said that the malaria germ (so small that it cannot be seen with the naked eye) destroyed the Roman Empire.

Are you looking after the "LITTLE THINGS" in life? Have you outstanding a number of little bills which are worrying you? Might not it be better to consolidate them into one debt which may be paid off by means of monthly deposits and then keep out of debt?

The Morris Plan Bank makes loans for any constructive purpose. One of our officers will gladly discuss your problem with you if you will call by this bank.

PROVOST OF G.W.U. SPEAKER AT SESSION

To Greet College Catholic Clubs at Convention on April 30.

Prominent on the program of the annual convention of the Middle Atlantic Province of the Federation of College Catholic Clubs to be convened at the Mayflower Hotel on April 29, 30, and May 1, is Dr. William Allen Wilbur, provost of the George Washington University.

At the meeting to be held on Saturday afternoon, April 30, at the Mayflower Hotel, Dr. Wilbur will deliver the address of welcome to the delegates and visitors from the 21 college Catholic clubs of the Middle Atlantic Province. He has always been one of the most active supporters of the Newman of the George Washington University, and much interest is being manifested in his coming address.

Dr. Wilbur is interested in the social and religious activities and affiliations of all students in the university, and he has expressed the wish that students of all faiths should affiliate with an organization of their fellow religionists.

The topic of his address will be to describe the important place that religion should have in the life of a college student as a future leader in the community to which he or she may return to. He will also speak to the visiting representatives of the George Washington Bicentennial celebration.

Dr. Wilbur is an alumnus of Brown University, having received three degrees from that institution, A. B., M. A., and D. of Lit. He has been professor of English of the George Washington University since 1897, and since 1928 has been provost of the university.

His pen has been an active one, the latest product of it being a history of the Columbia Association of Baptist Churches, which was published in 1928. He was signally honored in 1931 when George Washington University conferred upon him the degree of doctor of laws.

Reform in Dental Drugs Is Topic Before Society on Tuesday.

Dr. Samuel N. Gordon, secretary of the Council on Dental Therapeutics of the American Dental Association, will be the essayist at Tuesday night's meeting of the District of Columbia Dental Society at George Washington University at 8 o'clock. He will have as his subject "The Movement for Reform in Dental Drugs."

Dr. Gordon will discuss in a general way the activities of other organizations, his own organization's activities and what this has meant to the dental profession and the public. The general points will be illustrated by specific reference to drugs advertised to the public and to the dentist.

Dr. Arthur D. Weakley will give a short report on the recent "Four State Post-Graduate Clinic," held under the auspices of the District of Columbia Dental Society here, which has been held by the profession to be one of the most successful ever conducted in the East.

Howard U. Student Files Suit for $25,000

An explosion in a chemistry laboratory at Howard University yesterday was made the basis for a $25,000 suit by Ruth Downing, of Philadelphia, who, as a student, suffered serious injuries in the explosion.

The suit avers that on May 28, 1929, an experiment that she was conducting exploded in Miss Downing's hand. The charge is made that the professor in charge of the class should have warned her about the dangers attendant upon the experiment.

Payne, chairman of the entertainment committee of the Cosmopolitan Club, has completed plans for the elaborate "ladies' night" celebration to be held by the club for wives and guests at the Shoreham Saturday night. The party will start with a dinner at 7:30 o'clock, followed by entertainment and dancing.

Entertainment features will consist of selections by a noted singer and exhibition by a dancing team, headliners of a recent musical show, who will be brought from New York especially for this engagement.

The constitution of the Cosmopolitan Club, a luncheon organization of business and professional men, provides that at least one "ladies' night" shall be held each year and the entertainment Saturday night is in fulfillment of this provision. The affair will be held in the new ballroom of the hotel with McWilliams' orchestra providing music.

A luncheon will be given April 14 at 12:30 at the Raleigh Hotel by the Kiwanis Club, to be presided over by Alvin W. Hall, of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing. This program will be in the nature of a tribute to the memory of John Philip Sousa. An address will be given by Herbert L. Clarke, of California, who for many years was identified with Sousa's Band. A talk also will be given by Edwin Franko Goldman, president of the Bandmasters Associatoin. A musical program will be presented by the United States Army Band Orchstra.

Red Cross Plans Courses in Health

Hygiene and Care of Sick Will Be Topics of Local Chapter.

The District Chapter of the American Red Cross is planning to give two courses in "Home Hygiene and Care of the Sick." One of the courses to be given on Mondays and Thursdays, beginning April 15, at 5 o'clock, and the other class to be given on Mondays and Thursdays, beginning April 18, at 10:30 o'clock.

This course is given as a phase of health education, and is for the purpose of improving the personal health of those who take it, also giving instructions as to health problems in the home and teaching simple measures for the care of the sick.

After having completed this course and having fulfilled the necessary requirements, the applicant may become a health aid, if she is willing to volunteer for this service. This year it has been decided to make the course more practical by placing heath aids in organizations such as hospitals and clinics, at the request of such organizations and as approved of by the committee on nursing activities and health aids, of which Mrs. Mary Roberts Rinehart is chairman.

Rain Again Causes Kite Contest Postponement

For the second successive week rain has caused postponement of the kite flying contest to be held under the auspices of the District of Columbia Model Aircraft League at Anacostia Park. The driving rain yesterday caused officials of the league to put the contest off for another week, hoping that the weather would allow the kite fliers to meet next Saturday.

Selection of this date necessitates the cancellation of the model airplane contest, which was to have been held next Saturday under auspices of the league. In seeking a new date for the contest the sponsors first hit upon April 30, which would have allowed the model plane meet to continue, but it was found that April 30 would conflict with the Bicentennial parade of schoolboy patrols and high school cadets.

Cheverly Charter Decides Councilmanic Vote Issue

The question as to which Cheverly, Md., town councilmen are serving terms which will expire this spring has been solved, and John N. Ogle of the First Ward, and William A. Link, of the Fourth, are those whose posts will be sought through ballots.

The town's charter, adopted last spring, provides that the two councilmen who received the lowest number of votes should come up for reelection this spring. This was to insure that the whole council should not go out of office at once. Mr. Link received 14 votes, but both Mr. Ogle and Councilman W. R. Gaither received 15.

The Gordian knot was cut by the council by deciding that Ogle's term should expire this year. This decision was based on the fact that he was unopposed last spring, while another candidate was in the lists against Gaither. The council held that Ogle would have received fewer votes if he had had opposition, and he agreed to this assumption. Councilman Reginald H. Wentworth and Mr. Gaither will come up for reelection in 1933.

Both Mr. Ogle and Mr. Link have announced that they will be candidates to succeed themselves, and so far no one has appeared to run against them. Registrations of new voters will be held on election day, May 2. Glen Edgington and James Sparboro were appointed judges of the election in the First Ward and Arthur P. Buck will hold a similar post in the Fourth. Mrs. J. P. Forbes will be clerk of the Second Ward and Mrs. Henry Naylor of the Third.

French Killer of Playboy American Goes to Trial

Versailles, April 9 (U.P.).—Guy Davin, 28-year-old Frenchman charged with the murder of Richard Wall, New York playboy, who came to Paris to sell airplanes to European powers, went on trial for his life today after alienists reported that he was sane.

Hundreds of curious, including fashionably dressed women from the American colony in Paris where Wall once was a familiar figure, vainly attempted to gain seats in the courtroom near the historic Palace of Versailles. Davin has confessed shooting the American near St. Cloud, on the outskirts of Paris, in a stolen automobile, and then hurling the body into the Seine River.

California Takes Lead In Men Returned to Jobs

New York, April 9 (A.P.).—California led the States today in the Nation-wide campaign for a million jobs, with a report of 5,656 wage earners returned to work. New York continued to lead the Nation with a total of 41,598 jobs found for the unemployed in 162 cities and towns. The Nation-wide total was raised to 470,402 by the day's reports.

Headquarters of the campaign, which is sponsored by the American Legion, the American Federation of Labor, the Association of National Advertisers and the Legion Auxiliary, announced two directors would take to the field in an effort to increase activity.

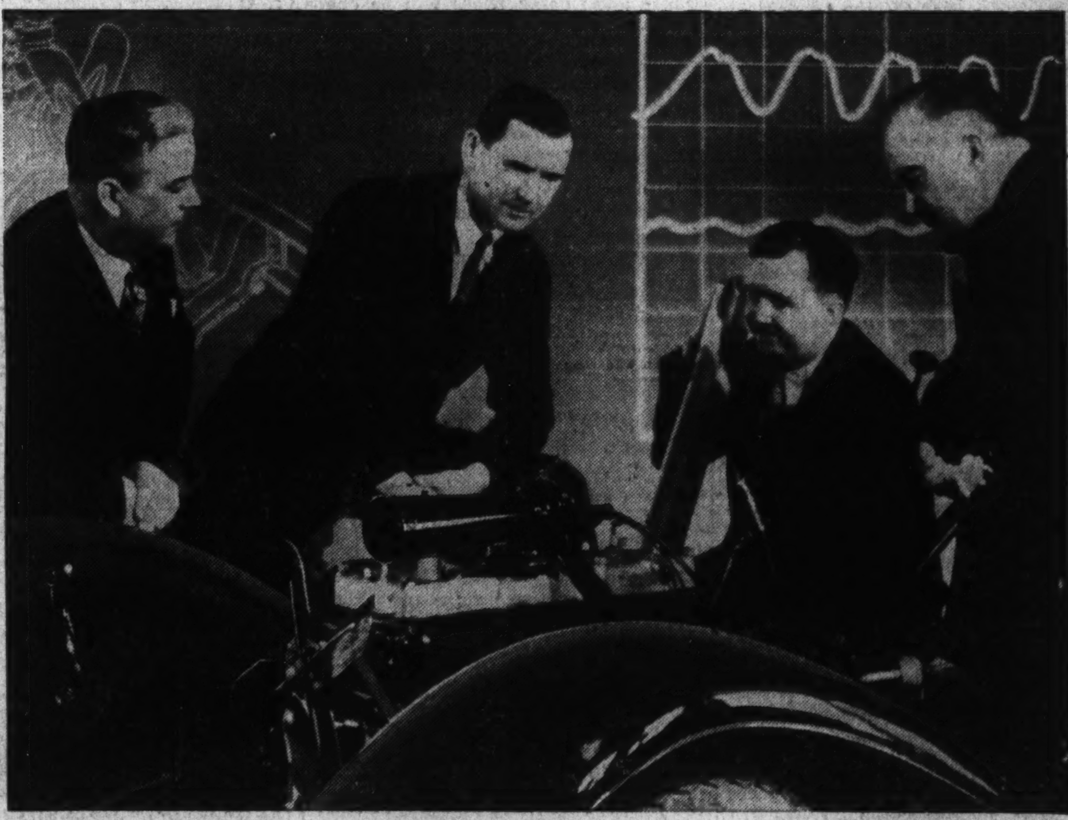
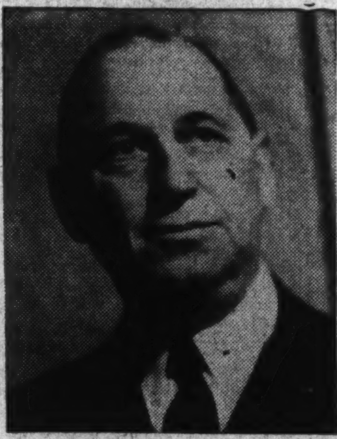
"In 1929, I Couldn't Have Built This Car"

WALTER P. CHRYSLER TELLS HOW THE NEW AND FINER PLYMOUTH WAS MADE





The New Plymouth is in every way the car for this buyers' market — a market that demands more value for less money — a market that refuses to take obsolete and cheapened merchandise.

There's a dramatic story behind this New 1932 Plymouth we've just announced.

It's a story written in sweat — the sweat of good, hard work—and plenty of it.

Two years ago, the New Plymouth could not have been built. If you had told me then that such a big, powerful, beautiful automobile could be made to sell for as low as $495, I'd have said, "Impossible."

But the depression gave us an entirely new viewpoint. It spurred us on to accomplish the seemingly impossible.

We realized that if Plymouth was going to take part in the big parade, we must think faster, work harder and build better than we'd ever thought, worked and built before.

And that's just what the Plymouth organization did.

Fortunately, we had the stuff to work with — the experience, the engineering brains, the modern production methods.

It wasn't an easy job we tackled, but now it's done, I can't help but take pride in it.

The New Plymouth, I honestly believe, is the finest low-priced automobile that ever rolled off any assembly line, bar none.

It is as big, as powerful; and it is faster, easier handling and ten times as smart as cars that sold for twice as much in 1929.

Just compare it with the other two cars in its price class. You'll agree the Plymouth is a bigger car, a better-looking car, a longer car, a finer car.

Plymouth has everything you could want in an automobile today. Floating Power. Free Wheeling. Silent-Second, Easy-Shift Transmission. It's smooth-running, the easiest-riding car I ever drove. It's packed with quality and quantity at an unbelievable price.

Again let me urge you, go and see the New Plymouth with Floating Power. Look at all three cars in the lowest price-field and don't buy any until you do. That's the sure way to get the most for your money.

DEPRESSION PIRATES.

It is high time that the Senate committee on banking should investigate the conspiracies which have diverted into private pockets the enhanced values resulting from successive moves of the Government to restore prosperity. Concerted bear raids, engineered by both American and foreign pirates, have repeatedly broken down the returning confidence inspired by such constructive measures as the international moratorium, the bankers' credit pool, the railroad wage and rate agreements, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and the Glass-Steagall act.

A feature of the situation which serves the ends of the depression pirates is the reluctance of banks to take advantage of the liberalized discount system provided by the Glass-Steagall act. Although the banks were urgent in demanding liberalization of the Reserve System's discount rules, they are not doing their share by extending credits on sound securities. Many banks are holding tightly to deposits which normally would be loaned to solid business concerns for current operations. The resulting embarrassments of business concerns are likely to bring about receiverships and unemployment, which may precipitate runs upon the very banks that have refused to keep money in circulation. Depositors who have a right to expect accommodations from banks will not permit their funds to be monopolized and frozen by bankers at the risk of precipitating commercial failures.

Foreign conspiracies which persist in raiding the American market, to the disadvantage of dollar exchange, are believed to have American affiliations. Such raids, striking at the heart of American financial integrity, are richly deserving of exposure, in order that the individuals concerned shall be branded as public enemies. The Senate committee will not go very far, if it is really in earnest, before it will uncover dastardly transactions in which financial pirates have scooped in millions at the expense of honest business men who are struggling to keep their personnel employed.

The Senate committee has all necessary authority to investigate all phases of stock market practices; to examine books and papers, and to compel the attendance of witnesses, who can be punished for contempt if they refuse to testify. Now that it has been developed that combined foreign and domestic influences can use the stock market to plunder the public and undermine the integrity of American finance, the probe should be sunk deeply into the situation, to the end that Congress may enact a law defining this crime and providing for its punishment.

BEAUTIFYING PARIS.

Paris is to have a new avenue as magnificent as the famed Champs Elysees as a memorial to victory in the World War. The thoroughfare will furnish another entrance to the capital from the west. The prize of 100,000 francs for the best plan for the new avenue was won by the French architect, M. Bigot. It will have at the present entrance to Paris, the Maillot Gate, a statue of Georges Clemenceau, while the monumental bridge over the Seine will be guarded by heroic statues of Marshals Foch and Joffre.

The new avenue will extend in a straight line from the Triumphal Arch of the Etoile through the suburb of Neuilly, across the Seine to the so-called Rond Point of Defense, commemorating the siege of 1870. The Avenue of Victory, as it will be called, will have the same noble width as the Champs Elysees, and at its terminus will be erected a winged statue of Victory, overlooking Paris.

Bordering gardens, fountains and waterfalls will lend their charms to make this grand boulevard the pride of the city. At night white lights will illumine the figures of the three men honored by France as her leaders in the war. Some of the details to be incorporated in the scheme for this ambitious improvement will be borrowed from the design of M. Cogne, the architect who won second prize. The statues of M. Clemenceau and the two marshals will be hewn by Landowski and Bouchard. Work on the Avenue of Victory is to begin in the near future.

"CANCELLATION OR CHAOS."

The four-power conference at London on the Danube situation has ended in failure. French spokesmen blame Germany for the breakdown, while Germans insist that the Franco-British proposals at the conference, if accepted, would have deprived Germany of a good market in the Danube countries and made it correspondingly more difficult to face the reparation problem. The first consequence of the breakdown is to strengthen the temporary accord between France and Great Britain.

The desperate plight of Austria and Hungary is cited by certain American debt cancellationists as a warning that the United States must be prepared during this year to face the alternative of "cancellation or chaos." This formula is attributed to Norman H. Davis, who is returning to Geneva with Secretary Stimson, ostensibly to discuss disarmament.

German propaganda received by The Post, stressing the argument that unless the United States reduces or cancels the debts there will be chaos in Europe resulting from Germany's inability to pay reparations, is good evidence that all the governments of Europe are agreed upon one point, at least: They unanimously hope that the United States will cancel the debts. In this hope they are comforted by the support of American international bankers and their spokesmen.

"Cancellation or chaos" has no terrors for Americans. The day has passed when threats of European collapse can scare Americans into making further gifts of money to Europe. "Go ahead and enjoy your chaos," is now the American response. "Let's see how big a chaos you can organize. The United States has a fair-sized chaos of its own, and if it succeeds in extricating itself it will do pretty well, without taking over further burdens from mismanaged European countries. We notice that you can raise money for armaments. Some of the little Danube countries that are shrieking for help are maintaining armies twice or three times as big as the United States Army. Bring on your chaos, and quit begging."

The governments owing money to the United States are boasting of their prosperity. France is not only solvent, but French interests are manipulating the market against the American dollar and profiting by bear raids in Wall street. British finances are in good shape, thanks to the sturdy cooperation of the people in paying taxes. Both Britain and France are in a position to pay their debt installments to the United States. Italy has just floated an internal loan which was oversubscribed. Evidently the Mussolini government can meet its modest obligations to the United States.

The European maneuvers aimed at debt cancellation are a part of the struggle between Germany and her creditors. Germany is taking the risk of a collision with France in the hope of throwing off reparation obligations. Rather than face a decisive conflict with Germany, France is bending every effort to induce the United States to extinguish the debts, so that all creditors of Germany can reduce reparation demands without losing anything.

American international bankers are very anxious to reduce the war debts. If those debts can be shifted over to American taxpayers Europe's credit will be enhanced, and the excessive holdings by certain American banks of German obligations can be liquidated. Besides, there is always the prospect of fresh bond flotations as soon as Europe can squirm away from the debts to America. These flotations are very profitable to the bankers, however ruinous they may be to American victims.

MANCHURIA AND KOREA.

No government has recognized the puppet regime set up in Manchuria by the Japanese army. Tokyo officials still contend that the new government arose out of a spontaneous movement on the part of the inhabitants. But world opinion is not convinced. Great Britain has definitely refused to recognize Henry Pu-Yi's government. Even Japan is hesitant in welcoming her child of war into the family of nations. Maybe Tokyo is waiting to find out how large a Japanese army will be required to maintain this "independent" government.

Japan vociferously disclaims any intention of absorbing Manchuria. Students of history recall that similar indignant protests were made when Japan was accused of casting envious eyes upon Korea. It should be said that Japan is not brutal in her conquests. She lavished promises and friendship upon her victims before swallowing them. The record of what happened in Korea is more eloquent in forecasting the fate intended for Manchuria than any prognostication could be.

In 1894 Japan and Korea signed a treaty the object of which was "to maintain the independence of Korea on a firm footing." Four years later Japan signed a treaty with Russia definitely recognizing "the sovereignty and entire independence of Korea." Japan pledged herself "to abstain from all direct interference in the internal affairs of that country." Great Britain and Japan entered into a treaty in 1902 to maintain the status quo in the Far East, especially "the territorial integrity of the Empire of China and the Empire of Korea."

In declaring war against Russia in 1904 the Japanese Emperor said: "The integrity of Korea is a matter of gravest concern to this empire," and "the separate existence of Korea is essential to the safety of our realm." Only thirteen days later a Japanese-Korean protocol declared that "Korea shall place full confidence in the imperial government of Japan, and adopt the advice of the latter in regard to improvements in administration." This was for the purpose of "maintaining a permanent and solid friendship between Japan and Korea and firmly establishing peace in the Far East." At the same time Japan undertook to insure the "safety and repose" of the Korean imperial house and again to guarantee the territorial integrity of that country.

About a year later England recognized the right of Japan to take such measures "as she may deem proper" in Korea because of the paramount political, military and economic interests of Japan in that country. The convention of 1905 between Japan and Korea gave the former "control and direction of the external relations and affairs of Korea" to "strengthen the principle of solidarity" between the two countries. Two years later a second convention gave Japan a veto power over all internal affairs of Korea through a resident general. Prince Ito, the resident general, in 1909 admitted Japan's intention of annexing Korea. He was shot and killed by a Korean student.

In 1910 the final blow came. The Emperor of Korea made "complete and permanent cession to his majesty the Emperor of Japan of all rights of sovereignty over the whole of Korea." The Japanese government gracefully accepted those rights and "consented" to complete annexation. The name of Korea was changed to Chosen and a new government was set up.

It is interesting to note, also, that in 1904 the Japanese government declared that "the absorption of Manchuria by Russia would render it impossible to maintain the integrity of China, and would, in addition, compel the abandonment of all hope for peace in the extreme East." Now the shoe is on the other foot. Japan should be the last to complain if it pinches.

In many respects one may obtain a clearer picture of the broad forces at work in the Orient from a glimpse at history than by trying to fathom the innumerable ramifications of the present dispute.

THE DANUBIAN PROBLEM

By BALKANICUS.

It is a long time since any question has so focused public attention in two hemispheres as has the proposal to create an economic federation of the states of the Danube basin. The proposal is far from securing universal acceptance, but it is such a logical solution of the chaotic conditions prevailing in southeastern Europe that its realization, in one form or another, seems assured.

The former Austro-Hungarian empire, it is now universally admitted, had never, politically, any right to exist. The fact that 7,000,000 Austrians and an equal number of Magyars ruled, with an iron hand, over 36,000,000 Slavs, Poles, Czechs, Slovaks and Serbo-Croats, created a situation that, for decades, menaced the peace of Europe. Austria-Hungary was not a country; it was an emperor, an army and a bureaucracy. Its statesmen, for half a century, were forced to execute a political dance on eggs, playing on the passions of half a score of different races to prevent them combining against the rule of Vienna and Budapest.

When, therefore, the armies of the House of Hapsburg went down to defeat in 1918, the whole empire collapsed like a house of cards. The debacle was, probably, the most complete that history has ever registered. Austrian Poland and Galicia joined hands with the redeemed German and Russian Poland to form an independent Polish republic of 30,000,000 souls. The Czechs and Slovaks formed the republic of Czechoslovakia. Transylvania and the Bukovino broke away from Hungary and gravitated toward their brothers-in-race of the Kingdom of Roumania, while the Croats, Slovenes, Dalmatians, Bosnians and Herzegovinians rallied around Serbia to form the Kingdom of Yugoslavia.

The first care of each of these succession states, as they were called, was to erect a tariff wall and create a national army to consolidate its position. Thus divided into water-tight compartments and thrown back on their own resources, they had to struggle with ever-increasing economic and financial difficulties. The first to collapse was Austria. With a total population of 7,000,000, the fact that 2,500,000 inhabited the city of Vienna made the country too heavily engined for its beam, and only the timely aid of a loan from the League of Nations saved her from national bankruptcy. Hungary went through a similar experience, and then the other succession states began to feel the pinch in their turn. The world has, therefore, the spectacle of a collection of states which, under the Austrian Empire, had been highly prosperous, going from one economic and financial crisis to another.

The reason for this is not far to seek. The Austrian empire, while a political monstrosity, had been organized, economically, on highly intelligent and efficient lines. Poland and Galicia supplied the coal and oil; the Czechs and Slovaks possessed a highly organized industry; Hungary, on its immense and fertile plains, provided the foodstuffs for the whole empire, while Dalmatia furnished a hardy maritime population which manned the imperial navy and the merchant marine and carried on an important fishing industry. Vienna with its universities, colleges and great technical schools, its great financial institutions, its powerful press, its great railway organizations, furnished the brains which directed and developed the economic life of the empire to its highest point.

Then came the political overthrow of the empire and the breakup into its component parts. The coal and oil of Poland and Galicia went to the Polish republic; the ports and harbors of the Adriatic littoral went to Italy and Yugoslavia; the merchant marine disappeared, and Hungary was left with hundreds of thousands of tons of foodstuffs and no means of selling them. European statesmen now perceive that the salvation of southeastern Europe lies in again piecing together economically the states of the Danubian basin so that the currents of commerce will again begin to flow freely.

Unfortunately, many jealousies and anxieties in these states still persist, and some of the latter-day developments do not favor closer union. In the thirteen years which have elapsed since the disintegration of the Austrian empire Czechoslovakia has greatly developed her national agriculture and the agrarians are today a strong and efficiently organized party in the Parliament, which views with disfavor any proposal to throw open the frontiers to the wheat and corn of Roumania, Jugoslavia and Hungary.

These latter states have, in their turn, undertaken industrial developments and have now nascent textile and other industries, which will not easily be persuaded to agree to concessions to the industries of Czechoslovakia and lower Austria.

But the national interests of the various Danubian states are not the only ones at stake. The interests of the great powers have also to be considered.

In the case of the German Reich, there is a conflict between its industrial and political interests. The industrial world in Germany is interested in anything that will bring back prosperity in southeastern Europe, as it will mean a wider field for German commerce. The politicians, however, see in the federation of the Danubian states the final death-knell of all idea of the "Anschluss," which many Germans will only abandon with the greatest reluctance.

In the case of Great Britain its statesmen favor anything that will bring back normal commercial conditions to Europe. In a country where these conditions are a life and death question for British trade, anything that will improve commercial relations is certain to find favor. Unfortunately, Great Britain is not altogether convinced that international politics will not play a preponderating role in the proposed combination. It is notorious that France spreads her protecting wings over the Little Entente—the alliance of Czechoslovakia, Jugoslavia and Roumania—and fears are felt that she will further extend her political influence over the proposed federation and make use of it to create a French hegemony.

Such a prospect does not appeal to the Italian government, which for thirteen years past has been working to obtain a strong foothold in the Balkan Peninsula.

There are many difficulties to be overcome, both national and international, before the proposed Danubian federation can come into being. But the necessity of finding a solution, if southeastern Europe is to be saved from disaster, is so great, and so many statesmen of talent and experience are working on the problem, that it seems impossible a solution should not be found.

MOON AND CLOUDS.

One night I came up on deck when the moon had risen an hour, and saw as strange and beautiful a sight as ever made me sigh for the lack of numbers in my soul. A huge, long, black cloud hung pendent from midway in the sky, with its lower part resting on the sea. It was for all the world of marvels like a great dragon, shaped rudely to a semblance of the beast of the Apocalypse, and with its head lifted into the ether, so that it was framed against the heavens. The moon was in its mouth: the moon shaped like an eye, a brilliant, glowing, wondrous orb, more intensely golden for its contrast with the ominous blackness of the serpentine cloud. I felt that I had found the origin of the Oriental fable. Some minutes the illusion held, and then the cloud lowered, and the moon, alone against a pale-blue background, the horizon a mass of scudding draperies of pearly hue, lit the ocean between the ship and the edge of the world in a tremulous and mellow gilded path.

HARD LABOR.

A good time means going to the races, playing bridge, drinking cocktails, dancing till 4 in the morning, and talking about nothing. And meanwhile the beautiful, the incredible world in which we live awaits exploration, and life is short and time flows stanchlessly, like blood from a mortal wound. And there is all knowledge, all art. There are men and women, the innumerable living, and, in books, the souls of those dead who deserved to be immortal. Heaven preserve me, in such a world as this, from having just a good time.

Was, like themselves, entirely blind?

TALLEST LIVING THING.

In a national park, about 20 miles from Sydney, Australia, there is a eucalyptus tree 572 feet high—17 feet higher than the Washington Monument. Trees of this species, native to the Antipodes, commonly range from 100 to 400 feet in height, but only the one single specimen is known to have reached the altitude of "the grandfather of them all." A brass plate attached to the trunk claims for it the honor of being the loftiest living thing in the world.

Polish Pact With Russia Is Withheld

Warsaw Waits for Soviet and Roumania to Agree on Bessarabia.

MOSCOW, April 9 (A.P.).—On the conversations now proceeding at Riga between Soviet Russian and Roumanian representatives rests not only the question of a treaty of nonaggression between the two countries but the final signature by Poland of a similar instrument with Soviet Russia as well.

Poland already has provisionally initialed such a pact with the Socialist state but it is just learned that the reason it did not formally sign it was because Soviet Russia had no engagement of that character with Roumania, which long has disputed Soviet claims to Bessarabia.

Poland has made the conclusion of a nonaggression treaty between Roumania and Soviet Russia the condition on which she will sign a similar pact with this country.

* * * *

"WHY should we sign what doubtless would amount to a mere scrap of paper should Soviet Russia and Roumania go to war over Bessarabia?" was the interrogatory explanation advanced in authoritative Polish circles here.

"If those two countires decided to settle their differences on the battlefield where would Poland be, bordering as she does the two enemy states? No. We first must be assured that Soviet Russia and Roumania intend to keep the peace before we will enter into any such arrangement."

This Polish position, although fundamentally the same assumed in Warsaw for years, represents some modification of former policy toward a nonaggression treaty with Soviet Russia.

In 1926 Soviet Russia, then beginning to inaugurate its policy of bilateral agreements with other countries with some success, proposed such a pact to Poland, but the latter's insistence on, not an individual engagement, but a general treaty between Russia and its border neighbors on the west disrupted the negotiations.

* * * *

SHORTLY after August, 1931, however, the two countries reached a basis of renewed discussion, apparently inspired by the Soviet government's success in concluding several nonaggression treaties with individual states.

Early this year the Soviet press hailed the initialing of a Polish-Russian treaty of "nonintervention and nonaggression," but officials neglected to mention the condition imposed by Poland for formal signature.

Roumania wishes to ignore that question entirely. Soviet Russia contends that any treaty of nonaggression should set forth that the question of Bessarabia still is unsettled.

At present nonaggression pacts already are in force between Soviet Russia and Germany, Turkey, Persia, Afghanistan, Lithuania, Esthonia, Finland and Latvia. France, in addition to Poland, has initaled one provisionally and Soviet Russia has proposed a similar treaty with Japan, so far without result.

Stone Used by Christ Is Reported Found

Tiberias, Palestine, April 9 (A.P.).—The boulder upon which Christ stood on the shores of the Sea of Galilee to perform the miracle of the loaves and fishes is believed to have been discovered at Taugna, near here.

The stone was found in the center of a fourth century church recently uncovered, and is presumed to have been beneath the altar. The church was one of the many built during the reign of Constantine the Great.

Behind the stone was found a mosaic panel, depicting in vivid black, red and yellow, a basket, several loaves of bread and two fishes.

In the western half of the church a mosaic floor was uncovered, about 15 feet long and 21 feet across. It contains a design of storks and other birds, and is said to be the best-preserved mosaic floor ever found in the Holy Land.

Although buried beneath dust and rubble for about 1,600 years, the mosaic shows no signs of erosion.

Tabgha is on the way to Capernaum and the surrounding area is the desert of Bethsaida, mentioned by St. Luke (chapter ix), as the site where Jesus fed a multitude of 5,000 with five loaves and two fishes.

Air 'Flivver' Is Cheap

Tempelhof, Germany, April 9 (A.P.). An "Air Flivver" has made its appearance on the German market after its debut before the examining board of the Berlin air polcie.

The new baby plane, expected to popularize civil aviation, sells for 2,600 marks, about $650.

The little plane is a high-wing type fitted with a 20-horse power four-cylinder motor. Taxiing along a stretch of about 50 yards it takes to the air within 5 to 8 seconds. The maximum speed is 78 miles per hour.

An exceedingly low landing speed permits descents on small fields.

Want French Apples

Rennes, France, April 9 (A.P.).—Apple cultivation, like charity, should begin at home, is the belief of the organizers of the International Apple Congress to be held here tomorrow.

Its main object is to induce French farmers to Americanize their methods of apple growing and supply eating apples for which France is now almost wholly dependent on the orchards of Oregon and Washington.

Most of the apples grown in Brittany and Normandy are used for cider making.

Hitler Coins Minted

Berlin, April 9 (A.P.).—Coins minted and sold by Adolf Hitler's National Socialist Party are the latest novelty in German politics.

Issued in denominations of 30 and 50 pfennigs and 1 mark, they bear the inscription, "Distress Offering; I Did My Bit." They are being sold to raise money for party coffers.

Briand in 'Ole Cloes'

Pary-Sur-Eure, France, April 9 (A. P.).—A monument to Aristide Briand, showing the late foreign minister in old clothes and with a fishing rod, is to be erected in this, the nearest city to the hamlet of Cocherel where Briand had his country home.

Flat of 4 Rooms Over Palace Garage Is Home of Foreign Minister Litvinoff

No Curtains Adorn Windows 16 Families Live in 16 Other Rooms.

The six windows in the second story of this garage light the four-room home of Maxim Litvinoff, Russia's foreign minister, shown below with his English-born wife.

MOSCOW, April 9 (A.P.).—A combined servants' quarters and garage in the rear of the former palace of a Moscow merchant prince, is the new home of Maxim Litvinoff, commissar for foreign affairs of the Union of Socialist Soviet Republics.

He with his wife, two children and one servant occupy an apartment of four small rooms and bath. They have a total floor space of only 450 square feet, or about the size of one of the palace's large rooms.

They share the rambling two-story structure, which also houses five automobiles, with a score of workers' families.

The foreign commissar formerly lived in an equally unpretentious abode in an old building which had been converted into an apartment house and in which he had only three small rooms.

Neighbors describe Litvinoff's present home as being furnished with severe simplicity. There are no curtains at the six windows which look out on the backyard of the former palace.

Directly beneath his apartment are two double garages, one of which houses the commissar's official automile, a sleek maroon limousine of an expensive American make. Entrance to his second floor apartment is through a doorway adjoining the garage.

The building has 20 rooms altogether and Litvinoff is the only one of the occupants who has more than one. The others live as do most of Moscow's working population—one family to a room, with community kitchen and bath.

When they are not attending public school, the Litvinoff children—a boy 12 and a girl 10—play in the spacious grounds back of the palace.

Even with these modest quarters Litvinoff is better off than many of his government colleagues who, bound by the rigid Communist code and the exigencies of Moscow's housing shortage, live in the plainest style. Joseph Stalin, the dictator of all Russia, for instance, has only a two-room apartment in the Kremlin, and so has M. J. Kalinin, whose office corresponds to that of president of the republic.

The palace, of which the foreign commissar's home is an insignificant part, is in one of old Moscow's better sections. It formerly was owned by I. A. Morosov, a wealthy textile manufacturer before the revolution.

It now is the foreign office house, where all of that department's formal receptions are given, where visiting dignitaries are entertained and where a few foreign specialists are quartered permanently while on duty in Moscow.

Many American engineers and their families have lived here in the great rooms and eaten at the broad refectory table from gold serving plates once the property of the former master.

It has become a coveted dwelling place for many of these specialists who know what Moscow hotel life is like, but only a few can be accommodated.

FROM A SENATOR'S DIARY

Being the Day-by-Day Observations of a "Member-at-Large" Set Down for His Own Satisfaction.

By the 97th Senator

Wednesday.

I DON'T believe the people of this country realize what gave danger now threatens them. They ought to be warned. They are in imminent peril of having the Senate debates broadcast upon them.

Clarence Dill, of Washington, is the chief sponsor of the broadcasting idea, although dour Bob Howell, of Nebraska, is giving him plenty of help whenever he can spare time from his main objective—making Washington the prohibition paradise of America. Dill has a bill to provide for installing the necessary apparatus. As a matter of courtesy, George Moses called a meeting of the rules committee to give Dill a chance to explain the advantages of his plan and to permit radio experts to show how it might be done mechanically.

SENATOR ROBINSON.

Senators, it seems, would wear on the lapels of their coats neat little microphones which would pick up their voices and send them hurtling through the air to all parts of the world. These coat-lapel "mikes" are the latest thing in radio and they work exceedingly well, according to the experts. The only trouble is that they are so highly sensitized that they pick up the softest whispers, so that the senators would have to be careful to put their hands over them if they didn't want their words broadcast.

Jim Watson pointed out that it is difficult enough now to get senators to stop talking, and said that if they knew their speeches were being broadcast it would be next to impossible to stop them. Then the question of deciding the hours for broadcasting came up. Howell had a ready solution; he proposed putting all the proceedings on the air. Dave Reed, politely and modestly, suggested that the public might not be interested. He called attention to the fact that newspaper correspondents sometimes sit in the press gallery "by the hour without making a single note, because evidently the matter being transacted is of no earthly public interest."

"Yes," said Joe Robinson, ruefully, "and I know that they sometimes miss the point. I know they have done it in my own speeches. I am not sure that listening over the radio would mean that the general public would get the point."

I was about to suggest that it might be well to have an expert announcer to cut in on the proceedings from time to time to explain the point of the speeches to the uncomprehending public. But at that moment George Moses adjourned the hearing, leaving the whole subject undecided.

Thursday.

THE favorite-son bloc is dissolving and the favorite sons themselves are being converted into vice presidential possibilities. Alben Barkley, of Kentucky, set an example by declining, with thanks, the support of the Blue Grass delegates as a result of which he ranks near the top of the list of possible running mates for Franklin Roosevelt, notwithstanding his bonedryness. A few days later, Joe Robinson, of Arkansas, followed Barkley's example, and now there is talk again of nominating Joe for the same position he held on the ticket with Al Smith in 1928. I don't believe Joe will get the nomination, however, in spite of the tendency in politics of lightning to strike twice in the same place.

There aren't many bona fide favorite sons left. Virginia is supporting ite former governor, Harry Byrd, brother of the famous Admiral "Dick," polar explorer. Byrd is now busy raising apples in his extensive orchards in the Shenandoah Valley, but keeps an eye on political affairs. He has been classed as a dry, but his friends are now saying that he is "no fanatic." Although they are booming him for the Presidency, it is believed he could be induced to accept second place.

Gov. George White is Ohio's favorite son, at least in the preconvention maneuvering. White was elected governor as a dry in 1930, and a while back there was a movement among the prohibitionists to rally around him as their best bet for the presidency. Then White ran out on them. He boldly stood up before an audience of drys and told them some rather unpalatable facts about the failure of prohibition to prohibit. His speed indicated that he could be induced to support a referendum plank. Gov. White, of course, will not get the presidential nomination, but as a result of his excellent geographical position and his recent moist speech, he will be able to make a strong bid for the vice presidential prize. A governor from a pivotal State, turning moist now after having been elected by the drys, can hardly be ignored.

Then there is the Illinois favorite son, none other than the peerless and effulgent J. Ham Lewis. Ham is delighted to accept the support of the Illinois Democrats for the Presidency, but what he is really angling for is the vice presidental nomination. Ham, though he can not justly be accused of excessive modesty, has plenty of political sense, sufficient, in fact, to allow him to concede to himself that he has no chance for the Presidency. He has had a hankering for the Vice Presidency for years. And what a gorgeous ornament he and his whiskers would provide for the vice presidential chair! Surely, there would be nothing dull or drab about the Vice Presidency during the term of Ham Lewis.

JOHN F. CURRY.

I do not include Ritchie, of Maryland, or Garner, of Texas, in the favorite-son class. They do not properly belong there. Ritchie has already said he would not accept the vice presidential nomination, and Garner, I am sure, would much prefer to remain in the speakership.

Neither do I include Jim Reed, of Missouri, because he is in a class by himself.

Friday.

STRANGE things are happening in politics these days. Witness, for instance, the conduct of Tammany. In bygone days, Tammany leaders stayed within the confines of their own bailiwicks, venturing forth on errands abroad only in cases of extreme necessity. To the general public they made themselves invisible, and as for prying newspapermen they thought of them much as the frontiersman of yore thought about the Indians: "The only good ones were dead ones." They shuddered at the very thought of a trip to Washington, where they might be thrust into the limelight. It wasn't that they were shy, but that sort of thing just didn't conform to their technique.

William Marcy Tweed, better known as "Boss Tweed," tried his hand in Washington politics once—just once—and then never again. That was in 1853, long before his name had become a byword for municipal corruption throughout the land. He got himself elected to Congress. When he arrived here, he found them talking about States' rights, nullification, slavery and other hifalutin things he didn't understand. He was bored and the pickings were poor. He soon hied himself back to fields of larger endeavor in Manhattan, where he later distinguished himself as the greatest racketeer of the nineteenth century.

Since then Tammany leaders have steered clear of Washington—until very recently. Dick Croker and Charley Murphy, if the occasion arose, might slip into town unseen and out again, still unseen, except by those they wanted to see. But now there is a new Tammany leader, and while the tiger may not change his stripes, he has changed his tactics.

When Boss Curry comes to town now there is nothing furtive about his movements. He goes about openly in the daylight, takes up quarters at a leading hotel, visits the Capitol, confers with Democratic leaders, takes an active interest in national affairs. He goes even further. He invites the newpapermen to meet him at his hotel apartment, chats affably with them, submits pleasantly to their cross-examination. He doesn't give them much information, but he sends them away marveling at the metamorphosis of Tammany.

Saturday.

NOW, we have the tax bill to "rassle" with. Let us hope that the Senate will be able to consider it with somewhat less hysteria and breast-beating than was seen in the House. But already letters are beginning to pour in upon senators beseeching them to oppose this levy or that levy. Local interests will dictate many votes, just like they do on tariff bills. Every one wants to "balance the budget," but every one wants the other fellow to do it. With an election in the offing, politics and economics are bound to collide head-on in the revision of the bill. Only the rashest of prophets would venture to predict what kind of a bill will emerge from the Senate. I am willing to hazard my mileage allowance for the year that the Senate bill will be just about as unpalatable to the country as the House bill. The times are so far out of joint that even the sugar-coating experts have lost their cunning when it comes to framing tax bills.

Italy to Pay Honors Over Anita's Body

Remains of Garibaldi's Young Wife Being Transported Home From Nice.

ROME, April 9 (A.P.).—Italy will honor the memory of Gen. Giuseppe Garibaldi, "hero of two worlds," and his Brazilian wife, Anita, in ceremonies beginning with the arrival of Anita's body here in May for final rest in the family tomb at Campo Verano.

Premier Mussolini, King Victor Emmanuel and other personages will participate in the ceremonies, which will last until mid-June.

A stone statue of Anita, 50 feet high, will be unveiled June 1 on top of Janiculum Hill, overlooking Rome. The duce will deliver a eulogy on that occasion.

The statue shows Mme. Garibaldi fleeing on horseback, with her baby in her arms, and will be placed beside a statue of her husband.

* * * *

THE fiftieth anniversary of the general's death falls on June 2. His body rests at Caprera Island, off Sardinia, where he spent his last days.

Garibaldi, Italian patriot, known as the "Liberator," was born at Nice in 1807. He became recognized as one of the greatest masters of revolutionary war in a long career, in which he took part in campaigns in Italy, Brazil and Uruguay.

Premier Mussolini will deliver an address on the anniversary of Garibaldi's death before a joint session of Parliament, recalling the general's heroism in his campaigns in Italy and South America and stressing the historical importance of his deeds in the two worlds.

A few days later a pilgrimage will be organized to the general's tomb on Caprera Island.

A special funeral train will go to Genoa for Anita's body, which recently was brought there from Nice, where Garibaldi buried it.

Ezio Garibaldi, grandson of Anita and the general, will accompany his grandmother's body to Rome.

* * * *

THE present generation of the Garibaldis has its home here. Mrs. Ezio Garibaldi is the former Hope McMichael, of Philadelphia. They have a baby named Anita.

Anita Garibaldi occupied a tender spot in the memory and traditions of Italy. For ten years she accompanied her husband in his campaigns here and in South America.

She died of fever when only 28 years old during Garibaldi's retreat from Rome to San Marino.

A Garibaldi exhibit, in which documents, pictures and other records of the general's life and campaigns will be on display from early May to mid-June.

The life story of Anita as written by her husband in his later years is to be published here at Mussolini's request.

In his memoirs Garibaldi referred to her as the "most perfect human creature known to mankind."

THE DIPLOMATIC POUCH

By HAROLD J. T. HORAN

"They're Off."

TALLEYRAND'S dictum that a diplomatist be fastidious even in his choice of amusements, is carefully followed by members of the corps here in Washington. Their distractions range from the bridge table to the race track.

The opening of the racing season found several habitues of the royal sport at Bowie. Eduardo Diez de Medina, former Bolivian Minister and now special envoy for the Chaco dispute, was in glad evidence. The aristocratic profile of Senor Ulises F. Espaillat, secretary of the Dominican Republic Legation, was bending over giving a "hot tip" to Vice President Charley Curtis. Senor Oscar Blanco Viel, counselor of the Chilean Embassy, back from his Cuban holidays, was accompanying two lovely ladies.

Racing is a very popular sport in South America, were the tracks are as beautiful and as large as Saratoga or Belmont. Buenos Aires, in Argentina, Vina del Mar, in Chile, and Rio, the capital of Brazil, have magnificent hippodromes under responsible stewards, who are usually men of eminence in the life of the country.

Martinez Dios, former President of the Argentine Republic is also president of the Buenos Aires Jockey Club. Senor Dios is one of the syndicate of wealthy Argentine sportsmen who paid the record sum of $265,000 for August Belmont's Tracery.

DANTES BELLEGARDE, Minister from Haiti, is a linguistic anomaly at the Pan-American Union. He speaks only French. All the other delegates speak, Spanish even Brazilian Ambassador Lima e Silva.

The Haitian Minister is like a Peck's Bad Boy at the meetings of the Union. He speaks with great clarity, emphasis and freedom, although Cuban Ambassador Ferrara, who presides, is often visibly embarrassed by his remarks. Minister Bellegarde has a rich, sonorous voice and can always be relied upon to furnish the fireworks. He was one time professor of law in his own country and has lectured at the Ecole de Droit Internationale in Paris.

Clothes and the Man.

WITH the departure of Roumanian Minister Charles A. Davila, the Diplomatic Corps will lose its best-dressed man. The envoy of King Carol is invariably smartly turned out with a sober, discreet elegance that is a blend of London, Paris, Rome and Bucharest—suits, linens, silks and boots.

Brazilian Ambassador Lima e Silva has great sartorial enthusiasm and has been known to change his clothes four times in one day—morning coat, lounge suit, another lounge suit and finally a sport costume. It is even hinted that the ambassador has a blue full dress suit.

The Turkish Ambassador, Ahmet Muhtar; the Belgian Ambassador, Paul May; Hungarian Minister Szechenyi and the Minister from Ecuador, Don Gonzalo Zaldumbide, are also models of "what the well-dressed diplomat will wear." The French Ambassador, Paul Claudel, is easily the worst-dressed man in the corps.

ONE of the Rothschilds has married into the Polish diplomatic service. Lovely Diane de Rothschild, daughter of Baron Robert de Rothschild, has just become the wife of Anatole Muhlstein, counselor of the Polish Embassy in Paris.

Baron Robert de Rothschild is not one of the wealthiest of the descendants of the Frankfort family, as the head of the family is today Baron Henri de Rothschild, famous doctor, playright and scientist. His brother James is head of the London banking house.

Thaddeus Zazulinski, secretary of the Polish Embassy here, was formerly consul general in Chicago. Shortly before he was transferred here he married an American girl who is an expert aviatrix and flies here own plane. Mme. Zazulinski also speaks Polish, which she learned in three months.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Roosevelt's Relief Plans Hit by Virginia Democrat

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Gov. Franklin D. Roosevelt, in his criticism over the radio of President Hoover's relief measures, has clearly demonstrated the fact that it is high time the Democratic leaders were looking elsewhere for a man to nominate for President at the national convention in June. Mr. Roosevelt criticized the administration for what he terms furnishing relief from the top down rather than relief from the bottom up. I happen to be one of those who would be classed around the "bottom" strata referred to by the governor, but I have sense enough to know that unless our financial institutions, railroads and other leading industries are maintained on a sound basis we little fellows will not only lose what we have, but that the depression will be greatly intensified and prolonged and that hundreds of thousands who are now employed will lose their jobs.

It is but natural for the politician seeking office to appeal to the little fellows—those at or near the bottom of the ladder—simply because the voters in this class are far more numerous than those who guide and manage our industrial and financial institutions.

But if any one who has a job and desires to retain it will only think for a moment of what would become of him if his employer went broke, the fallacy of Mr. Roosevelt's theory at once becomes apparent. The same principle applies to those now out of employment, for the sooner the employers of labor are made secure the sooner will work be available for all.

Furthermore, had the same amount that has been made available by the administration for relief purposes been distributed among those at the "bottom," it would have been only a drop in the bucket, furnishing, perhaps, temporary relief, but in the meantime its effect would have been entirely lost by the collapse of banks and railroads.

At a time like this the Democrats should be certain that a statesman rather than a politician is selected to head the ticket in the November election. No soak-the-rich slogan will win any votes this year because the people are face to face with realities, and especially do the "common people" realize as never before the source of their bread and butter.

Irish Allegiance to England Asserted to be Unnatural

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: In reading editorial comments and special articles in the Washington press and listening to news reviews broadcast over the radio pertaining to the present Anglo-Irish situation, it is illuminating to observe how far these molders of thought are from the heart of the problem. The public is presented through these agencies with an untrue and fantastic picture of a few intractable, impractical and rebellious leaders demanding that unwilling followewrs refuse to yield allegiance to the British crown. There is, at least, a strong implication that the allegiance demanded by England is a natural one, based on a common racial origin, common ideals and the right of the "predominant partner" to require such allegiance.

As a matter of fact, it is hardly possible to imagine two European countries that are further apart in their origin, their ideals, or their outlook upon life in general. This wide divergence of thought and principle is not so apparent in the guarded public utterances of representatives of the two races as it is in the daily lives and habits of the people. This irreconcilable difference is the factor that has kept the two nations apart in the past. It is fundamental, deep rooted and ineradicable, and will always keep them apart in tuture.

Ireland suffers under no illusion regarding the object for which the links that still bind her were retained. She knows from bitter experience that they bode no good for her. Make no mistake, De Valera truly represents that Ireland.

Recently the undersigned had occasion to protest statements made by Mr. Kaltenborn in one of his reviews of the news over the radio in which he referred to Ireland as "a nation without a history" and piously hoped that she would not "renege" on the payment of the land annuities to the "owners." In his reply Mr. Kaltenborn endeavored to justify the use of the terms quoted, and drew an analogy between the land annuities and the German reparations payments. Reparation payments from Ireland to England! What sublime irony, in the light of the British Royal Commission report on the overtaxation of Ireland during the century that followed the passage of the act of union.

Cut in Government Salaries Seen as Breach of Contract

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I have sent the following letter to Representative Lewis, and would appreciate its use in The Washington Post:

I reside in Chevy Chase, Md., but have long been in the real estate business in Chevy Chase, D. C., dealing in properties on both sides of the line. By far the larger portion of our business, naturally, is with Government employes. The nature of our business with them has given me an excellent opportunity to know their economic and social problems and to admire the sane philosophy under which they live.

It is well known that there is no opportunity in the Goverment service for high financial achievement. The so-called "big money" is not there. There is, however, a compensating grace in the service, and that is security. Undoubtedly, this element is what induces many able men and women to enter Government service and remain there. Now, security implies not only continued employment, but continued employment at well-established rates. It is on this understanding, consciously created by our Government, that able men and women enter the service. Once in, they adjust themselves to the Government scale of compensation, for good times and bad. In good times their dollar buys less. Thus, during the long high-price period culminating in 1929, the Government employe was compelled to live on a less scale, while in the commercial world his brother was receiving a higher scale of pay. Since 1929, prices have been down, and the Government employe's dollar has about reached the point where it will get for him those things his commercial brother has been enjoying during all the prosperous years. It is now proposed to reduce this compensation. When prices again rise, he will be compelled to lead a hand-to-mouth existence until his pay scale can be adjusted upward, always a long, tedious process.

I know how carefully the average Government employe budgets his existence; and I know how fatal a cut in his income will be to his budget commitments over a period of years; commitments that he had every right to believe he would be able to take care of.

I have a great admiration for the Government employe who has deliberately decided to smooth out his life as nearly as possible, to forego the peaks of prosperity for the maintenance of an ordered existence during the periods of depression. And I feel strongly that to cut his pay now will be a definite moral breach of contract by the Government.

A disperited employe is never worth what he is paid, no matter how little—and the profits on an employe definitely depends on what that employe pays you. Cut the Government employe's salary 10 per cent and you will cut his spirit 20 per cent. These employes are human, and that is an instinctive, uncontrolable human reaction. The Government has certain work to do; what controls is the aggregate cost of that work, not a salary paid an individual. Will not a 10 per cent pay cut result ultimately in at least a 10 per cent rise in aggregate pay rolls? Able people will leave the service as fast as they can, and equally able people will not be procured to replace them under this new Government policy.

Has not the Government given these employes its word? I am old-fashioned enough to respect a given word, legally enforceable or not, and I can not believe that this Government will do a moral wrong.

Restoration Asked Of Ceded District

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The news item in The Post of Wednesday, April 6, stating that the House District streets, avenue and traffic subcommittee is inquiring whether high water or low water on the south side of the Potomac River marks the line between Virginia and the District of Columbia, seem to be a waste of time.

The only way in which any dispute regarding such boundary can be equitably settled is for Virginia to restore that which she unjustifiably took away, after in the most solemn manner she had transferred to the "Federal City" sole jurisdiction of all of that tract of land now known as Arlington County, and in which large numbers of residents are desirous of having their rights restored.

However, so long as Virginians seem desirous of grabbing more, is it not about time for the residents of the "Federal City" to inaugurate a movement that would bring back their actual heritage, that "land of milk and honey" just across the river, which possesses taxable property worth millions of dollars, from which for over a half century Virginia has enjoyed the usufruct, every dollar of which rightfully belongs to the "Federal City?"

This heritage is derived almost solely from the efforts of that great Virginian, Thomas Jefferson, who, by a trade or deal made with Alexander Hamilton, enabled Hamilton to obtain that which he long had sought, and Jefferson, his long-cherished wish that the "Federal City" should be located on each side of the Potomac River.

If each side had not been specifically designated, the City of Washington would never have been established.

Who else than Dr. George C. Havenner, the president of the great civic organization that stands for everything looking to the betterment of our people, could any one suggest to lead a movement that would honor Washington during this Bicentennial year by restoring that which he created?

Claim Contradicted Old Men Are Stupid

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Prof. Walter B. Pitkin, of Columbia University, apparently has no particular aversion to publicity. He has had quantities of it. It appears that he has learned how to get even more. His trick is to say something shocking and let the newspapers gnaw on that something. His latest performance is that of declaring that old people are the most stupid people in the world. Of course, he knows that plenty of controversy will follow his pronouncement.

The World War, Prof. Pitkin says in illustration of his thesis, can be blamed almost completely on the fumbling of old men. When the war broke out Clemenceau was 73, Hindenburg was 66, Moltke was 66, Kitchener was 64, Foch was 63, Joffre was 62, Asquith was 62 and Wilson was 58. If we were to concede that these men promoted the struggle, we should have to agree that it was brought about by men of the average age of 64. But the fact would have little or no significance.

Benjamin Franklin was 69 when the American Revolution began. Charles Darwin was 62 when he published "The Descent of Man." Andrew Mellon was 66 when he became Secretary of the Treasury. Oliver Wendell Holmes, retiring from the Supreme Court at 90, left such a vacancy as no available successor could completely fill. History brims with proof that a man does not cease to be useful when he passes the meridian of life.

"A man beyond 50 can't help thinking in terms of the past," Prof. Pitkin declares. Suppose this is correct, what is there tragic about it? The past is a large part of the present and of the future. The past is part of us. Just now when it is fashionable to "live for today and for today alone," it might be distictly salutary if some of us would think in terms of the past. Especially in America, the past variety of thinking is vastly to be preferred to what is considered "thinking" in the present.

Prof. Pitkin lays down the proposition that "no person in history has been absolutely devoid of stupidity." Ergo, stupidity is not the exclusive property of adults of mature development. Since Prof. Pitkin himself is 64 years of age, he generously permits us to infer that his reasoning is tainted by the universal disability of mankind.

Napoleon's Plans Known to Volney

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Toward the end of his life, George Washington, as might be expected, was considerably interested in the career of Napoleon Bonaparte, the ambitious Corsican whose name was then beginning to be known throughout the world.

In 1795 there came to the United States the eminent French sociologist, Constantin Francois Chasseboeuf Boisgirais, Count de Volney (1757-1820). While in this country, Volney predicted, day after day, the operations of Bonaparte's campaign in Italy, pointing out the places where the Austrians were to be defeated. The weird accuracy of these statements astonished every one, while many looked upon Volney as a French general in disguise and whispered dark hints regarding his reasons for being in America. Finally the matter was submitted to the attention of Washington, and the Father of his Country, in his usual forthright manner, asked Volney for an explanation.

Volney calmly replied: "In 1792 I met at Marseille and in Corsica, a young lieutenant of artillery, and, being much struck by his conversation, invited him to my house. I was soon satisfied that he was a man of extraordinary genius * * * The conversation fell on the war. Bonaparte developed a whole plan of operations to be pursued either in Italy or in Germany. I took down his words, and he now follows the plan of campaign explained to me years before."

At his request, Washington was permitted to see the notes which Volney had made of Napoleon's scheme of conquest. From that time to the last hour of his life Washington followed the details of the Corsican's career with unflagging attention, convinced, like Volney himself, that Bonaparte was a supreme genius of the art and science of war.

When Volney returned to Paris he was asked to serve as consul with Napoleon, but declined. Many honors came to him, but he is principally remembered for his famous book, "The Ruins of Empire."

Imitations Seen Aiding Inventions

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The intellectual powers of man may be discussed as being of two kinds: invention and imitation. The former is the capacity for creating new forms by the alteration, change or adjustment of already existing forms, as, for example, the manufacture of an umbrella represents the combination of cloth or paper with metal or wood in a manner entirely original and for a use entirely novel. The instinct to invent is creative in character. It is, so to say, the sharper, the more dynamic of the two powers, and it is the rarer of the two—it occurs less frequently. Imitation, it follows, is the ability to repeat an action already performed by the inventive faculty. Thus, an inventor made the first umbrella; an imitator made the second. And this capacity to copy an action or an object is of supreme importance, for upon it depends the dissemination of cultural achievement. The inventor creates a new form; the imitator applies it, duplicates it, conveys it to the larger public. The two powers are complementary. Each is obligated to the other, and upon the contact between them, upon their union in society, is founded the cultural progress of mankind.

We owe the telescope, the microscope, the compass, the sextant, the calendar, the clock, the steam engine, the automobile, the telephone, telegraph and radio, the camera, and all the countless other utensils, instruments and devices which go to form the mechanical basis of our civilization to the genius of individuals of high inventive skill, but the democratization of all these things we owe to the almost equally valuable imitative ability of multitudes of relatively mediocre people.

WASHINGTON

By EDGAR A. GUEST

Privations grim were his to bear.
Long hours of doubt were his to face.
With faith sublime and courage rare,
Goalward he set his face.

Some heroes on full-tide are swept
To glory and the chance they seek,
But Washington, at slow pace crept
Uncheered from week to week.

His was the genius of despair,
The courage of the bitter doubt.
He saw men faltering everywhere
But kept his own heart stout.

Had Washington by sufferings keen
And envy's rancor been dismayed
Men's right to freedom might have been
A century more delayed.

EXTENDED TO PUPILS TUBERCULOSIS DRIVE

88,000 Children Will Receive Letters Urging Measures for Prevention.

Dr. A. C. Christie, president of the Medical Society of the District of Columbia, who is serving as executive chairman of the early diagnosis campaign committee of the Tuberculosis Association, yesterday announced that with the active cooperation of both public and parochial school authorities a letter of information is to be placed in the hands of 88,000 school children, to be taken home to their parents.

Dr. Christie said that the committee had been so much impressed with the practical value of the protective information presented in the address delivered by Dr. James G. Cumming, chief of the Bureau of Preventable Diseases of the District of Columbia' Health Department, at the opening meeting of the campaign, that it had been thought wise to incorporate the main points of that instruction in the letter to the children's parents.

Advice to Parents.

Dr. Cumming's advice to parents includes the proper disposal of the sputum of a tuberculosis person in the home, but he insists that this is only one of several factors of transmission requiring attention. If the control of tuberculosis is to be achieved, he holds that all avenues for the transmission of infection must be blocked.

Therefore, he emphasizes the necessity of having the eating utensils of tubercular patients scalded, the frequent cleansing of the hands of the patient and of other members of the household, and the cleanly handling and preparation of food. In a recent investigation Dr. Cumming found that 25 per cent of the spoons used by tubercular patients were found to be carrying tubercle germs even after these spoons had been washed in the ordinary manner, that is, without being immersed in boiling water.

Dr. Cumming insists that all avenues of transmission from both known and unrecognized cases of tuberculosis must be blocked by constant care as to clean hands and clean food.

Examinations Stressed.

Along with this information to be conveyed in the letter to parents of school children, which will be sponsored by the Tuberculosis Association and signed by Mrs. Ernest R. Grant, president, there is to go a statement of the importance of having all children examined periodically in order to prevent the approach of disease and having physical and dental defects corrected in due time.

The lettter will tell parents where examinations may be had if they are not able to have their own family physician, giving the address of the free clinic for tuberculous children at 312 I street, conducted by the Tuberculosis Association in cooperation with the Health Department.

The statistical spot map of the District prepared from official records of the Health Department, which is published today for the first time on another page of The Post, discloses the geographical location of the 590 tuberculosis deaths during 1931. At the same time the fact that the number of deaths in that year from tuberculosis was 20 more than during 1930 serves to emphasize the urgency of the fight now begun to find the sources of infection and inform the public as to how to prevent the spread of this communicable disease.

by giving him an overwhelming expression of confidence.

The president refrained from addressing the nation during the run-off campaign that has been in progress since last Sunday noon. Tonight the chancellor acted as his spokesman in a final appeal at Koenigsberg, which was broadcast throughout the Reich. Herr Hitler ended his campaign in Munich, his home town.

Observers have noted a difference between the spirit of the run-off campaign and the campaign that preceded the indecisive election in March. President Von Hindenburg's supporters have seized the offensive, forcing Hitler into the defensive—an alignment exactly reversing the situation of the previous set-to.

One fact in this Von Hinderburg offensive was the series of sensational raids on Nazi headquarters in Prussia, followed by the publication by the Bavarian and Hessian governments of seized documents presented as proof of the subversive tendencies of the Nazis.

In the first campaign Herr Hitler appealed to the voters with promises of what he would do if raised to power; this time he has been busy making denials of charges that his movement is illegal. For this purpose he established an "anti-lie bureau," which has issued daily answers to his opposition's accusations.

Three candidates are before the nation—the nonpartisan Von Hindenburg, who would develop the republic along the lines laid down by the conciliatory Dr. Gustav Stresemann and the present chancellor; Hitler, who stands for a personal dictatorship and a nebulous "third Reich," and Ernst Thaelmann, Communist, whose program would duplicate the proletarian dictatorship of Soviet Russia.

Lieut. Col. Theodore Duesterberg, Nationalist, who polled 2,558,939 in the March election, has dropped out, as has Adolf Gustav Winter, Revaluationist. Although the Nationalist leaders have counseled their party to stay away from the polls, Hitler is counting on getting much of the support that was accorded Duesterberg.

In this attitude he finds himself encouraged by the action of two groups which presumably voted for Duesterberg March 13; the United Patriotic Societies, headed by the Duke of Saxe-Coburg, and Count Ruediger von Der Goltz, and the Federal Farmers Federation, comprising chiefly the large land holders.

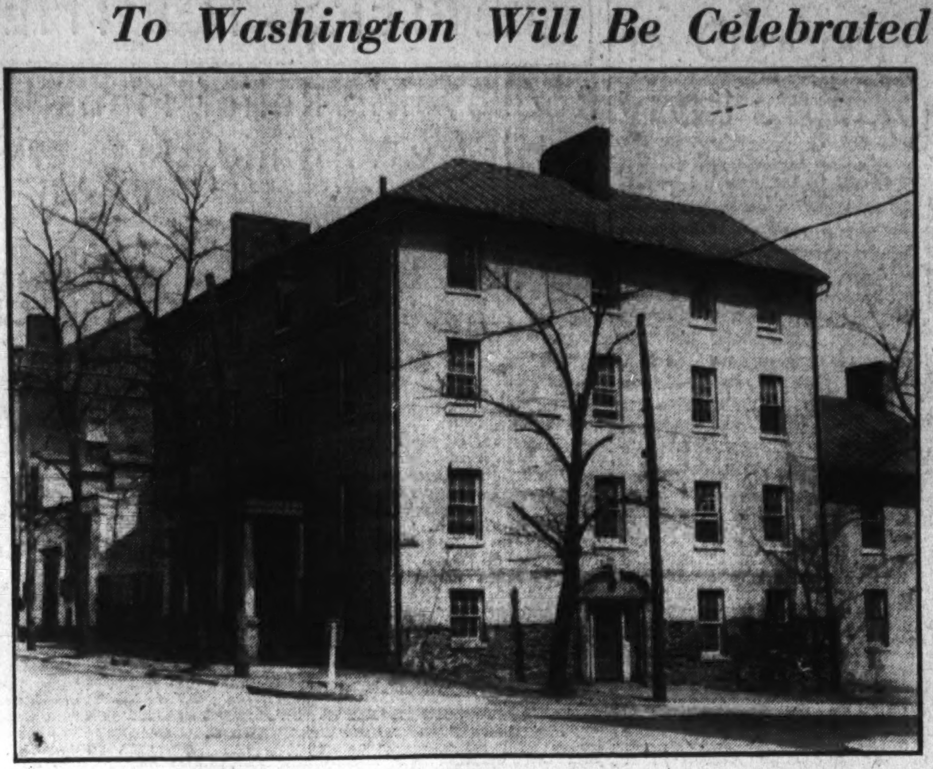
Anniversary of Alexandria Dinner To Washington Will Be Celebrated



Wise's Tavern, Alexandria, Va., where George Washington was entertained at dinner as he passed through the town on his way to New York to be inaugurated as first President of the United States. The building is now occupied by the Anna Lee Memorial Home for the Aged, established in honor of the mother of Gen. Robert E. Lee, commander in chief of the Confederate forces in the War Between the States.

Tablet Will Be Unveiled at Program to Be Held Saturday.

By CHARLES M. SHEPPERSON.

On Saturday afternoon at 2:30 o'clock the Washington Society of Alexandria will celebrate an event of which little has been written, yet it was one of the most momentous occasions in the history of old Alexandria, as well as in the life of George Washington. This was the dinner served to George Washington when he passed through Alexandria on his way to New York to be inaugurated as first President of the United States. The dinner was served in Wise's Tavern, conducted by John Wise, on the northeast corner of Cameron and Fairfax streets, in Alexandria, Va.

This will be the third event in the series of public celebrations by the Washington Society with which it will pay especial honor to Washington during the Bicentennial year. The first of the series was an elaborate and striking ceremony, in the latter part of December, last, honoring Dr. James Craik, lifelong friend and intimate of Washington, which was held in the old Presbyterian Church, in the yard of which Dr. Craik is buried. The second was the publication of a memorial book by the society, "Washington, First in the Hearts of His Countrymen," which was placed on sale on February 22; the third event will commemorate an incident of great historical import, and one in which the people of Alexandria and of Virginia take great pride.

The spring of 1789 was, for Gen. Washington, a period of mental unrest. Already weary and worn from his long and arduous military service, having retired, as he thought, to his beloved Mount Vernon estate for the rest of his life, he realized that he was about to be called from that retirement to again serve his country. He had not yet been able fully to retrieve the losses his estate had sustained during the period of the Revolution. It was the season when his farms most needed his attention, and he was short of cash. The Federal Constitution had been adopted, the election of the first President was imminent, and from all sides came intimations that the choice would undoubtedly fall upon him.

Prepared for Service.

While protesting, he studied the situation from all angles and in the end submerged every factor favoring his own deep-rooted desire for seclusion in the conscientious conviction that there could be but one answer when his country called.

In anticipation of the event he set his house in order and prepared for a long absence from home. First of all he paid a visit to his aged and ailing mother—his last, as he knew it would be. This was on March 11, 1789. The counting of the electoral vote, set for March 4, did not occur until April 6, and immediately thereafter Col. Charles Thompson, the venerable secretary of the old Continental Congress, was dispatched to Mount Vernon to officially notify Washington of his unanimous election as first President of the United States.

Secretary Thompson arrived at Mount Vernon about 1 o'clock on the afternoon of April 14, and immediately delivered to Washington the certificate of his election. He was a friend of years' standing and was made welcome at Mount Vernon as an honored guest. Before the close of that day Washington had written and dispatched to New York the following letter, addressed to the Congress:

"I had the honor to receive your official communication by the hand of Mr. Secretary Thompson about 1 o'clock today. Having concluded to obey the important and flattering call of my country, and having been impressed with an idea of the expediency of my being with Congress at as early a period as possible, I propose to commence my journey on Thursday morning, which will be the day after tomorrow."

Circle at Mount Vernon.

At this time the circle at Mount Vernon included Col. David Humphreys, of Connecticut, who had been an aid to Washington during the Revolution, and who for some time had been assisting in the arrangement of Washington's military papers. Under date of April 16, 1789, Washington records in his diary:

"About 10 o'clock I bade adieu to Mount Vernon, to private life, and to domestic felicity; and, with a mind oppressed with more anxious and painful sensations than I have words to express, set out for New York in company with Mr. Thompson and Col. Humphreys, with the best disposition to render service to my country in obedience to its call, but with less hope of answering its expectations."

As soon as it became known in Alexandria that Washington had set the time of his departure, an invitation was extended to him to stop in Alexandria, to dine with its citizens, and to receive an address of congratulation and farewell from his old friends and neighbors, which invitation Washington promptly accepted. When he, with his little party, rode through the gates of Mount Vernon and saw many of these old friends and neighbors, on horseback, drawn up along the highway to greet him, his countenance plainly showed the emotion that stirred his heart. Arriving in Alexandria the little cavalcade passed lines of local military and cheering citizens, and drew rein at John Wise's tavern, "At the Sign of the Bunch of Grapes," where the feast had been spread. This was the first stop made by Washington, the first of many on that memorable journey, and it was attended by an incident of high historic moment, one which has been somewhat neglected by historians.

John Wise, who was a famous boniface of his day, owned or leased a number of the inns or taverns for which early Alexandria was famous. From January 1, 1788, until December 31, 1792, he was located in the building, still standing, and now the Anne Lee Memorial Home for the Aged, at the corner of Cameron and Fairfax streets, an impressive four-story brick structure with a distinctive colonial atmosphere. The builder of John Wise's tavern was John Dalton. At the original sale of lots in the town, in 1749, he purchased lot No. 37, and on a portion of it built his home—still standing and still occupied as a residence—reserving the corner of the lot for future disposition.

Two Daughters Heirs.

In his will, dated March 9, 1777, and probated the same year, he describes the tavern building, then under construction, which he says shall be completed out of his estate; his heirs were his two daughters, Jenny, who became Mrs. Thomas Herbert, and Catherine, who married William Bird and became the grandmother of Miss Ann Pamela Cunningham, of Laurens County, South Carolina, to whom the Nation is indebted for the preservation of the Mount Vernon estate.

As soon as the building was ready for occupancy it was leased to George H. Leigh, who used it as an inn; for a number of years it was the starting point for the Philadelphia stages, which, it may interest some to know, started at 4 o'clock in the morning.

John Wise succeeded Mr. Leigh as landlord of the inn, which he named the Bunch of Grapes, in 1788, and it was Mr. Wise who had the honor of preparing the dinner which has become a high light of history.

At the conclusion of the meal, which was attended by many Alexandria citizens, Col. Dennis Ramsay, the mayor of the town, a close friend and relative of Washington, presented a prepared address on behalf of the citizens of Alexandria, beginning with the words: "George Washington, President of the United States"—the first time that Gen. Washington was publicly so addressed.

On Saturday afternoon, therefore, the Washington Society of Alexandria will unveil a bronze memorial tablet which it has placed on the building, commemorating this historic event. The ceremonies, while not elaborate, will include a short pageant during which the original scene of greeting to Gen. Washington will be reproduced, in colonial costume, by members of the society.

The tablet will be unveiled by Miss Katherine Meredith Reese, a great-great-grandaughter of Col. Dennis Ramsay, assisted by little Miss Nancy James Washington, a great-great-great-grandniece of the First President.

Gadsby's Tavern, which is located nearby, which dates from 1752, and which was the scene of the first and last public celebration of Washington's Birthday during the lifetime of the general, will be opened for the inspection of visitors.

Capital Boys to Join Party To Tour Australia in June

100 American Youths to Make Trip in Reciprocation for Similar Visit to This Country; Plan Widely Indorsed by Leaders.

Three or four Washington boys will take part in a good-will and educational tour of Australia by a party of 100 American youths this summer, it was announced yesterday.

The trip, planned by the Young Australia League, on the basis of an official invitation by the Australian government, including all state governments, is intended as a reciprocation for a visit to this country by 100 Australian boys three years ago.

American boys who will constitute the party will be selected for outstanding character, physique and scholastic attainments. It is expected that one of the boys from each city will be officially sponsored by civic organizations, all his expenses to be paid. Expenses of the others are to be met by their families.

John Buchan, official representative of the Young Australian League, who is making necessary contacts in the various cities, is now in Washington, staying at the Willard. He plans to be here about four days and will welcome applications from boys interested in joining the party.

The tour has been indorsed by the Washington Chamber of Commerce, the Board of Trade, the Rotary, Lions, Cosmopolitan and Kiwanis Clubs, and approval of the plan has been given by Secretary of State Stimson, Dr. Ray Lyman Wilbur, Secretary of the Interior, and Secretary of Commerce Lamont.

The Young America League is national sponsor of the tour. Leading members of the league are: James Rolph, of California; Gen. Smith, of the United States Military Academy; Dr. Van Klein-Smid, president of the University of Southern California, and Gov. Franklin D. Roosevelt.

Members of the party must be between 14 and 18. They will be uniformed and divided in squads under the leadership of carefully selected college men. Flags from the various States will be carried by standard bearers while sightseeing, and there will be a band.

The party will sail from San Francisco June 3, visiting Hawaii, Pango-Pango, Fiji Islands and New Zealand, before making a complete tour of Australia, where the American boys will fly to the big sheep ranches, hunt crocodiles in the northern tropical states, visit the colleges and universities, play international games and be generally entertained by the Australian government and its people. The entire trip will last about four months.

1,000 WOMEN WETS TO BESIEGE CAPITOL

Dry Members of Congress to Be Asked to Support Repeal Legislation.

Women antiprohibitionists, 1,000 from 40 States and the District of Columbia, arriving in Washington this week for the third national conference of the Women's Organization for National Prohibition Reform will place their prohibition repeal plea on the doorstep of Congress.

As part of the conference program, State delegations will make a special trip Wednesday morning to the Capitol to call on "dry" senators and representatives, to urge support of repeal legislation. The women's organization is in favor of repeal of the eighteenth amendment as a solution of the present prohibition and economic muddle and was one of the first to make a poll, by mail, of the present Congress on the question of resubmission.

The Capitol pilgrimage will be one of several political moves, to be made at the conference. It will launch the organization's political activity in the 1932 presidential campaign. A report from a special committee on political activities will be one of the most important of conference reports. It will be presented Wednesday afternoon.

Officials Here Today.

Organization officials, the vanguard of conference participants, arrive today and will set up headquarters at the Mayflower Hotel, where formal sessions take place Tuesday and Wednesday. Today's arrivals will include Mrs. Charles H. Sabin, New York City, national chairman, who launched the organization in 1929; Mrs. Courtlandt Nicoll, national vice chairman; Mrs. Archibald Roosevelt, national secretary; Mrs. William C. Potter, treasurer; Miss Maud Wetmore, Newport, R. I., chairman of the national conference committee.

State delegations begin arriving tomorrow, the last of arrivals on Tuesday, in time for the opening session, to be addressed by Mrs. Sabin and Mrs. Kellogg Fairbank, Chicago, former member of the Democratic committee and active in the antiprohibition organization. Mrs. Kellogg will picture "The 1932 Opportunity," and Mrs. Sabin's talk will be devoted to the progress of the organization in the last year.

Four prominent speakers, drawn from the experienced political and legal field, will address the April 12 evening public meeting. They are Breckinridge Long, nationally known lawyer, who was Assitsant Secretary of State during the Wilson administration; Howard Lee McBain, professor of constitutional law at Columbia University; Mrs. Florence P. Kahn, Republican representative from California, and Mrs. Henry Moskowitz, New York City, social and industrial relations worker and director of publicity for Alfred E. Smith in the 1928 Democratic national campaign.

Banquet for Members.

The addresses will be preceded by a banquet for organization members and their specially invited guests. Women prominent in official and social Washington, many of them wives of senators and representatives, will be in the assemblage.

The conference will be marked by the presence and active participation of outstanding Republicans and Democrats who have rendered valuable service to their parties. In the Republican representation are Mrs. Sabin, former member, Republican national committee; Mrs. Courtlandt Nicoll, New York City, former vice president, Women's National Republican Club; Miss Maud K. Wetmore, Newport, R. I., former president and now member of board of governors, Women's National Republican Club; Mrs. Archibald Roosevelt, New York City; Mrs. Amasa Stone Mather, Cleveland, member board of governors, Women's National Republican Club; Mrs. John S. Sheppard, New York City, member Gen. James G. Harbord's advisory committee, New York County Republican committee; Mrs. Coffin Van Rensselaer, member board of governors, Women's National Republican club; Mrs. Graham Dougherty, Philadelphia, member Welfare Council of Republican Women of Pennsylvania; Mrs. Robert W. Lovett, Boston, former chairman Massachusetts women's committee for Hoover; Mrs. Frederick M. Alger, Mrs. Henry B. Joy, Detroit, Mich., both prominent in Republican circles; Mrs. George Orvis, Manchester, Vt., former member, Republican national committee, who resigned to work for prohibition; Miss Elizabeth W. Clement, Rutland, Vt., former member Vermont Republican committee and member, Women's Republican Club of Massachusetts, and Women's National Republican Club.

Democratic Leaders Listed.

Leaders in the Democratic ranks are: Mrs. Kellogg Fairbank, Chicago, former member, Democraic national committee; Mrs. John B. Casserly, San Francisco, Calif., former member, Democratic national committee; Mrs. W. W. Pickard, Nutley, N. J., prominent in New Jersey Democraic circles; Mrs. Carroll Miller, Pittsburgh, member Pennsylvania Democraic State committee; Mrs. George E. Brennan, Chicago, widow of the former Illinois Democratic leader; Mrs. Gertrude Bowler, Sheboygen, Wis., former member Democratic national committee; Mrs. William T. Emmet, New York City, member Women's Democratic Union of New York State; Mrs. Anne O'Hagan Shinn, chairman Women's Democratic Union of New York State; Mrs. Mary Trainor, Wilkes-Barre, Pa., member of Pennsylvania State Democratic committee.

5,000 WILL DANCE AT CAPITOL PLAZA

George Washington's First Inaugural to Be Reenacted on Saturday, May 7.

More than 5,000 dancers in colonial costume will take part in the reenactment of George Washington's first inaugural reception and ball at the East Plaza of the Capitol, Saturday evening, May 7, according to Dr. George C. Havenner, vice president of the local Bicentennial Commission, which, with the cooperation of the Community Center Department, the All States Officers' Society, and various State societies, are conducting the event.

The celebration will be the most unique and colorful among the historic occasions of the Bicentennial year. The function will be open to the public through tickets of admission, obtainable from the organizations sponsoring the program. The plaza will serve as the area for the dancing, with music by the United States Army Band, and the costumed participants will be presented to President and Mrs. Washington, members of his Cabinet, and their ladies, who will receive the guests upon the Capitol steps.

Representatives of the States will impersonate Washington, John Adams, Jefferson, Hamilton, John Jay, Gen. Henry Knox, who was the Secretary of War; Edmund Randolph, who was Attorney General, and Samuel Osgood, who was Postmaster General.

General dancing will follow the reception by the presidential party, and special dances of the colonial period will be staged on the steps leading from the rotunda.

Approximately 500 jewelers from the District of Columbia, Maryland, Delaware and Virginia are expected to assemble here for the three-day session.

Washington jewelers, headed by Arthur J. Sundlun, president of the Tri-State Association, are making extensive plans for the entertainment of the guests, it is understood. A feature of the convention will be an elaborate silver display showing hundreds of the latest and most modern silver pieces.

Plans Under Way For Memorial Day

Youth Armament Meeting Today

Senator Nye and Green, Yale Senior at Geneva, Will Speak.

Senator Gerald P. Nye, of North Dakota, will be the principal speaker at the youth disarmament mass meeting at the Belasco Theater at 3 o'clock this afternoon. Representative Paul J. Kvale, of Minnesota, will preside at the meeting, and James Frederick Green, Yale University senior, who delivered a sensational address at the Disarmament Conference at Geneva, will speak.

A message to the convening group from James R. Angell, president of Yale University, read: "I feel that Mr. Green's speech at Geneva correctly and forcefully represents the opinion and sentiment of thousands of thoughtful American students. Recent events render it difficult to look with any immediate hope to the abolition of the specter of war. But as long as men retain their sanity and their courage they can never cease to strive for a more rational and less brutish method of adjusting human problems. Whatever your conference can do to localize and strengthen national and international resolution to mitigate and ultimately prevent the horrors of war will be a great human service."

Bishop James E. Freeman wrote that he is "profoundly interested" in the meeting. "With the conference now sitting in Geneva," he declared, "every effort should be made to consolidate the ranks of those who believe in a sane and continuing peace."

Two Criminal Courts Do Record Business

An all-time record for the number of persons handled in the two criminal courts of the District Supreme Court was registered Friday when 130 men and women were called before either Justice F. D. Letts or Justice James M. Proctor.

About half that number were liquor law violators, and the rest were arraignments and sentences. There was no confusion in the two courts despite the extraordinary number of cases handled.

PAINT MAKERS WIN COMMERCE AWARD

Selection of Association With Headquarters Here Announced by Lamont.

The American Paint and Varnish Manufacturers' Association has been named as the winner of the 1931 award of the American Trade Association Executives, which held its annual dinner at the Waldorf-Astoria, New York, last Tuesday night, after an all-day session at the Hotel Pennsylvania. The award was announced by Robert P. Lamont, Secretary of Commerce, who was chairman of the jury of award. It is given yearly to the trade association reporting accomplishments considered most valuable to the public and to industry at large.

"American business, through its trade associations, has demonstrated that cooperation among business groups may replace hostile and destructive competition, while preserving the American principle of individual initiative, individual achievement and individual reward, which is the keystone of our economic system," Mr. Lamont said in announcing the award at the dinner.

"We are in the midst of a struggle toward a newer and better economic age. We face a future containing all the necessary elements of progress and prosperity. We find evidence of such promise in the wide range of activity which our trade associations are covering, under a new spirit of leadership which has developed under the pressure of adverse business conditions, and which has been demonstrated in the face of a bitter economic struggle."

The trophy, a bronze-gold plaque, bearing the inscription, "Progress Through Cooperation," was received by General Manager George V. Horgan on behalf of the industry he represents. In accepting the trophy, Mr. Horgan paid tribute to the outstanding work of specific departments and committees conducting the association's activities. This is the third year this award has been made and the second time the paint and varnish industry has won honors—having received honorable mention in 1929.

Other trade associations which were given honorable mention without ranking them in the order of merit were the Association of American Soap and Glycerin Producers, the Cotton Textile Institute, the Northern Hemlock and Hardwood Lumber Manufacturers' Association and the National Bureau of Casualty and Surety Underwriters.

The jury of awards consisted of Robert P. Lamont, chairman; Owen D. Young, board chairman of General Electric Co.; Walter Dill Scott, president Northwestern University; Francis P. Sisson, vice president Guarantee Trust Co., and Merle Thorpe, editor Nation's Business.

The headquarters of this association are in Washington, where its affairs are conducted in an administration building at 2201 New York avenue northwest.

Rolph to Consider Plea Of Mooney Tomorrow

San Francisco, April 9 (U.P.).—The pardon plea of Tom Mooney, serving life at San Quentin in connection with the 1916 preparedness day bombing here, will be taken under advisement by Gov. James Rolph, jr., on Monday, the executive announced today.

His formal decision as to whether the plea, made early this spring, will be rejected, will be announced a week or ten days later, he said.

Texas Feels Earth Shocks.

Down East Methodists Adopt Pacifist Program

Leominster, Mass., April 9 (A.P.).—The New England Methodist Conference today unanimously adopted a report of its peace commission which requested that the Government exempt members of its faith from military service when they object on religious grounds.

It also opposed compulsory military training in schools and colleges and the exportation of arms and munitions for war purposes. It urged adherence to the World Court "at the earliest possible moment" and expressed belief that had the United States held membership in the League of Nations, the gravity of the recent Sino-Japanese situation would have been lessened.

LET'S GET GOING

An Address by

HERBERT KAUFMAN

Delivered Before the Advertising Club of New York

The law of supply and demand must solve the problem of frozen assets.

It's our appointed job to halt the raging epidemic of cold feet. Prosperity is suffering from an attack of surplus indigestion complicated with chilblains.

People are afraid of the banks and the banks are afraid of the people. While the public is inclined to withdraw its cash from deposit, depositories will continue to husband their money, to maintain a grotesquely liquid position against any possible attack upon their solvency.

As long as capital shivers in its boots, business will not dismantle its storm doors.

Neither the locked brakes of industry nor the locked vaults of Wall Street will be relaxed until the socked cash of the country recovers its guts, and enlists to put depression under bonds.

While we sit eating our hearts out and enjoying every mouthful, the chill wind of irresolution and gloom will continue to sweep the land, nip budding expansion, and keep national buying power huddled in the cyclone cellar, listening to ghost stories.

Overproduction may have started the depression. But underconsumption is now keeping the red-ink well filled.

The situation does not demand the Biblical "faith which moveth mountains"—it requires only the faith that moves stocks, clears shelves for reorders, and provides manufacturers with revenues to put more men and raw materials to work.

The President's Anti-Hoarding drive, not only called upon the people of the United States to put every available dollar into circulation, but made appeal for the release of restrained purchasing capacity, for the encouragement of business enthusiasm and for support of commercial initiative.

We cannot prosper while cynics and cash-cuddlers hold the purse-strings of the nation.

We've already wasted two precious years under the Wishing Tree waiting for George to turn up and set things right.

But George isn't available; he's in the hospital nursing a crick in the back from carrying too many of your burdens, and mine.

No minority influence can restabilize affairs. There's no way out of the mess into which we've floundered except through general conscription.

The entire community must lend hands, energies and means to the task of economic reconstruction.

This campaign must, above all else, impress upon the country that the United States is a cooperative institution to which each must contribute his due share of duty and self-sacrifice, as well as taxes.

Our credit structure is groaning under the weight of unengaged capital—capital sufficient to restore every idle man to the pay roll.

Sales records, stock quotations, car loadings, building contracts, advertising budgets, automobile output and merchandise movement scream warning that Yellow Fever has not only infected the financial district, but private purses as well.

The average family long ago quit buying luxuries; it's now overstinting on necessities, too. And Depression's favorite tonic is suspended consumption.

The only way back to prosperity is to spend our way back. That's why it's so important to coax hoarded dollars out of hiding and keep them jumping from pocket to pocket and till to till.

A study of inventories, assets and reserves shows that nothing has lately occurred to stunt or lastingly warp our development.

We've lost nothing since 1929 that common sense, common purpose and common faith can't restore to balance sheets and horizons.

We've consulted the text books and found them wanting—now we must turn to the check book for the solution of our difficulties and spend to mend.

Meanwhile, we are at grips with a sullen conviction that the foundations of stability have crumbled, that banks are generally unsound and that the rainbow has gone to join the dodo.

It's up to us all to tuck the Stars and Stripes under our arms, to prove that Old Glory is still all wool and a yard wide, and resell confidence, hope and courage to the country.

The Hoover Administration, aware that national well-being requires a wider credit base, has provided in the Reconstruction Finance Corporation a device through which banks may safely liberalize policies and furnish required funds for all sound operations.

Hereafter hoarding, misering and restricted buying must share responsibility with banking cowardice, for protecting depression, lengthening breadlines and intimidating enterprise.

Despite Time's recurrent testimony, that one first-class tomorrow can always thrash a historyful of yesterdays, we must not forget that there are irresolute millions of us who have convinced themselves that "we can never do it again," and wonder from what sources America will replace the money which mismanagement and speculation have squandered.

But that's an old tale. Incredulity has hurled its phantom stumbling blocks in our path from the suckling days of the Nation.

As early as 1842, Messrs. Chambers of Edinburgh, predicted in their encyclopedia that,

"as those splendid projects in which the Americans are so fond of indulging approach realization, the quantities of new lands will be daily growing less; the rapidity with which capital now accumulates will be diminished in the same proportion, and as the Nation becomes greater and more powerful, in the same degree will the resources of its population be lessened.

"These fancies, expressing the rapid increase of population and the filling of the whole American continent with a Nation of unparalleled power, are mere playthings of the imagination."

At that particular moment the entire Federal debt was $21,000.

The entire cost of running both State and Federal governments was less than $40,000,000 in 1837.

Benefactions of a single citizen, Mr. Rockefeller, have frequently exceeded that sum in a single year.

One of our private enterprises, the U. S. Steel Corporation, expands its assets a billion dollars' worth every decade. And Henry Ford, playing a lone hand, won't sell the business he has built from nothing (and in less than two decades), for a thousand million dollars.

President Van Buren could have paid all the overheads of his Administration with the income from our present peanut yield.

J. P. Morgan used to say that anybody who sold America short would finally go broke. The Chambers brothers were not his favorite authors.

Morgan knew that empires are conceived, industries built, and billions minted in the space covered by a hat—that confidence and ambition are the sole sources of wealth and power.

Confidence is the world's crack salesman. A pessimist couldn't earn day wages peddling ice water in Hell.

Let's get going. Action mends her wounds and gathers strength en route to new goals.

The resources of each generation are proportionate to its intelligence and enlightenment.

Steam, electricity and petroleum provided the bulk of our present billions; propeller, aerial and microscope will finally match their every penny with a dollar.

One bad spot in the road can't halt destiny.

Doubt has yet to raise a barrier that determination can't down. The muddles from which we are definitely emerging are not cues for discouragement, but clues for diognosticians. They indicate where incompetent plans went wrong, and suggest how to build more enduringly next time.

Methods that enriched the past, soon become the best friends of bankruptcy.

It took a powerful emetic to purge our economic system, but the remedy will eventually justify its heavy cost.

Necessity is a brutal midwife, but the ideas she brings forth are lusty giants.

How will America replace the money that mismanagement and speculation have squandered?

It will be earned as before, by mixing clock-ticks with sweat drops. It will come from bolder processes, from hard toil, from the exhaustless treasures of imagination, from the winged inspiration of invention, and from the deep purse of efficient practice.

That's how we accumulated past wealths. And that's how we'll refill our pockets.

Anybody who feels blue about the future of these United States has simply forgotten how to think Red, White and Blue.

HEAD OF SECRET SIX SAYS CAPONE'S FALL IS NOT END OF GANGS

Power to Continue as Long as Dry Law Remains, Randolph Says.

PRAISES PROSECUTOR'S EXPLANATION ON FACT

Does Not Fear Reprisal for Work; Thinks It Would Stir "Too Much Heat."

(Associated Press.)

Robert Isham Randolph, chairman of Chicago's "Secret Six," which is cooperating with public authorities to control organized crime, believes it will take more than the conviction of Al Capone and his allies to break up the gang racket.

In an interview, Randolph said Capone's crime ring was a "real business organization, with a board of directors" and that other men were ready to step into his place.

"The convictions that have already been secured of Capone and his agents like Gu[illegible] and Nitti will have a salutary effect," Randolph said, "but they don't break up the criminal syndicates.

"They are going to continue as long as the big profits and the huge rewards are to be had from violations of the eighteenth amendment and the Volstead law."

Not Mysterious.

Randolph, in Washington on other business, answered questions about crime conditions readily. He was far from the mysterious figure he might be pictured as head of Chicago's famous "Secret Six."

The amazing story told by District Attorney George E. Q. Johnson, of Chicago, before a Senate committee about the power of Capone and his gangster group was described by Randolph as a "splendid picture of the situation."

He said he was glad Johnson had made public the details of the agreement under which Capone was to plead guilty and receive a comparatively short sentence of 2½ years.

"That has taken the curse off the story that a deal was made," he said. "There was nothing sinister about it and heretofore it has had a sinister aspect."

Randolph said probably if Capone had not been "such a braggart" and announced the terms of the agreement Judge Wilkinson, who overturned it and gave him eleven years, would have given it serious consideration.

Describing the efforts of his own organization to protect witnesses and produce evidence against gangsters, Randolph said it had kept one of the Capone witnesses in hiding for eighteen months.

Before the gangsters learned that he had been found by the Government, Randolph said, his group took the man to a hotel in another city and paid him $10 a day to stay in confinement. When he got tired of that they sent him on a trip to South America in the custody of a ship captain.

Still Being Protected.

He is now free, in another city, but is under the constant protection of the "Secret Six," Randolph added.

"Why can't the Government protect the witnesses?" Randolph was asked.

"Because the Government has got to account for every cent it spends," he replied. "My organization doesn't want any accounting."

Randolph said the new municipal administration in Chicago was improving conditions through reorganization of the police department and a police chief who is "capable, competent, honest and fearless."

"Why don't the gangsters get you and District Attorney Johnson?" he was asked.

"They realize it would be very unwise to do anything to us," he said. "The heat would be too great."

Murray to Be Speaker At Farmer-Labor Parley

Omaha, April 9 (A.P.).—Speakers for the Farmer-Labor party's national convention, announced today, included Gov. William "Alfalfa Bill" Murray of Oklahoma and Jacob S. Coxey, sr., mayor of Massilon, Ohio.

Roy M. Harrop, vice chairman, said Coxey would discuss "The Cause and Cure of the Depression" at the opening session of the convention April 26. Harrop said approximately 1,000 delegates, representing at least seventeen States, would attend. Gov. Murray will appear the afternoon of the second day. Only two men, Frank Webb, of San Francisco, and Julius Reider, mayor of Rochester, Minn., are presidential candidates to date.

Father of Navy To Be Honored

North Carolina to Dedicate Monument April 28 to Joseph Hewes.

Edenton, N. C., April 9.—North Carolina will bring its George Washington Bicentennial celebration to a climax April 28, with dedication of a monument to Joseph Hewes, father of the United States Navy.

It was in Edenton that Hewes, a signer of the Declaration of Independence, culminated a career as merchant and ship broker by offering his entire fleet of ships to General Washington for transportation of food and military supplies.

Giving credit to Hewes' knowledge of maritime matters, Washington made him chairman of the Naval affairs committee, a body which controlled the continental Navy from its beginning in 1775 to 1776. Washington relied largely on Hewes' recommendations concerning the Navy, and the commission given John Paul Jones is generally credited as coming from the suggestion of Hewes.

CAPITAL ECHOES

By EDWARD T. FOLLIARD.

Who Threw That Inkwell at Frank Hogan? A Cloudy Record Is Cleared Up.

It is a strange thing, this legend that has grown up around Representative Thomas L. Blanton, of Abilene, Tex. I mean the legend about his ferocity. To hear people talk, you would think that Tom was a regular hellion with his fists. You would think—listening to this talk—that he has had a fist fight with every man in Congress. The truth is that most of this talk is downright libelous.

For example, there is that hardy fable about Tom and the inkwell. You hear it said that, during the Fenning investigation Tom threw an inkwell at Frank Hogan, the lawyer. Well, it was not Tom who threw it at all; it was Representative John E. Rankin, of Mississippi.

JOHN E. RANKIN.

Tom Blanton has been in Congress for about fifteen years now, but so far as I can learn he has had but one fight. And if the version I get is correct, I don't know whether you could rightfully call that one a real fight.

* * * *

The story is that Tom and former Representative Jim Wilson, also of Texas, had an argument over some legislative matter, and that they locked horns outside of the House Office Building. This was in 1918.

Wilson, according to one version, had Blanton down on the sidewalk and was holding him by the ears, trying to bring his face around so that it could be properly hit. But Tom refused to cooperate.

"Come on here," Wilson is said to have cried, while he tugged at Blanton's ears, "hold still so that I can hit you."

The humor in this seized both of them, and they burst into laughter, thus ending the fracas.

A few years ago, there was a commotion in the Speaker's lobby just off the House floor. Blanton was involved in an argument with Dick Elliott, of Indiana, now retired. Nothing much came of it. In the end, one of the disputants—I think it was Elliott—picked up a Congressional Record and, extending his remarks, so to speak, hurled it at the other.

So you can see that most of this talk about Tom Blanton is just talk. We reporters, I suppose, are to blame for a lot of it. We call him the "fiery Texan," and we announce that he is going after this official's scalp, or that official's scalp, until we have our readers thinking that he is a veritable man-eater. Blanton is a ferocious worker, and he is a bloodhound in an investigation, but so far as actual physical combat is concerned—well, I don't think he particularly craves it.

* * * *

To get back to the inkwell episode, Blanton was out of the city when this happened. He had started the investigation that was to drive Commissioner Frederick A. Fenning out of office because of the manner in which he had handled the affairs of insane veterans at St. Elizabeths.

Representative Rankin got into the investigation late, after the case had gone before the judiciary committee. Frank Hogan was Fenning's lawyer and though he was getting no such fee as he was later to receive from Doheny he went to bat for his client in typical Hoganesque fashion. From the outset he irritated Rankin. Finally, he infuriated him and the Mississippian, in an emotional explosion, let fly with the inkwell. Some of the ink spat-

PICTOGRAPH WRITING OF AMERICAN INDIAN SERVED RACE WELL

Despite Shortcomings, System Proved Useful Adjunct to Tribal Life.

EXAMPLES ARE FOUND IN NATIONAL MUSEUM

How Calendar Was Kept by Representation of Important Occurrences.

By JAMES WALDO FAWCETT.

American Indian writing was of the pictograph variety. It was not phonetic; there was no attempt at the representation of definite vocal sounds by means of written characters. It was a rebus system. Thoughts were expressed by drawings intended to symbolize the subject itself rather than the subject's name.

Naturally, such a system had its advantages, but it had its serious disadvantages, also. All men do not see alike; the symbol used by one man might not be understood by another. There was a tendency toward too great simplification in certain symbols and toward too great complication in certain others. But even when full allowance is made for inevitable obscurities and misreadings, picture records among the Indians were a useful invention in a great many respects.

Individual wise men in the various tribes kept a chronological record of pictographs, called the winter-count. This was in effect a calendar of the events or characteristics of succeeding winter seasons, by reference to which the authors were enabled to recall to mind occurrences of other periods of the year as well. For example: If the death of six persons by smallpox were the memorable event of a certain winter, the historian's mind, noting that fact in the count, would recollect that during the following summer five additional victims of the same disease perished, but in the record itself only the demise of the six who died during the winter would be represented. The entries in a winter-count were guideposts of tribal or family or individual history, not by any means a full or complete record; they were aids for an active memory, not substitutes for one.

Symbolism Crude But Apt.

But rude as they were, some of the these counts were famous throughout large sections of the country; they were consulted, or their authors were, by all who might be concerned to demonstrate or to establish a chronological fact, exactly as our own vital statistics are consulted by ourselves.

For the making of a count the inner side of a tanned buffalo hide was customarily employed. A symbol representing an important event of the current or first ensuing winter was painted or drawn in the center. The second winter another symbol was entered beside the first, and so on in a spiral sequence. In case of the death of the owner of the count, the work was sometimes carried on by another person, and thus very large counts were evolved.

The symbolism certainly was very crude as a general rule, but occasionally it was amazingly apt and acute, indeed, and full of evidence of a creative as well as an interpretative instinct.

Pictograph Records of Songs.

The winter count of the Dakota, Lone Dog, was widely known among his people. It was begun in 1800-1801, and carried on for 71 years. The first symbol entered represented "Thirty Dakotas killed by Crow Indians." But it is characteristic of the method that only the murdered members of his own tribe were represented (by a series of long, black lines) and nothing whatever appears to indicate by whom they were slain. Lone Dog, seeing the entry, remembered how they died; he did not clutter his count by indulging in detail with respect to his enemies.

In the same economical fashion the third winter was symbolized by a single horseshoe, meaning "A Dakota stole

NEW PATENT OFFICE WILL HAVE OFFICIAL OPENING TOMORROW

Quarters in Department of Commerce Building to Be Formally Dedicated.

ALL-DAY CELEBRATION TO BEGIN IN AUTDITORIUM

Addresses Will Be Made by Government Chiefs and Exhibits Displayed.

The new home of the United States Patent Office, a monument of limestone and marble to the Nation's inventive genius, situated at the north wing of the new Department of Commerce Building, will be opened officially tomorrow with an all-day celebration.

The celebration will be the second event of its kind in American history, the only similar event being the Inventors and Manufacturers Congress of 1891, which celebrated the beginning of the second century of American inventive progress.

Removal of the Patent Office from its old quarters at Ninth and F streets northwest, marks the final evacuation of a building first occupied 95 years ago. Efforts to secure adequate housing have been in progress for many years and the success of these efforts is accepted as an event of vital significance to inventors and manufacturers.

Morning Session in Auditorium.

The morning session of the celebration will take place in the new Commerce Building auditorium. Secretary of Commerce Lamont, Patent Commissioner Thomas E. Robertson and Thomas E. Ewing, president of the American Patent Law Association and former patent commissioner, will speak.

The afternoon session will include the throwing open of the New Patent Office for public inspection, with Commissioner Robertson and his Patent Office force acting as hosts. A reception will be held for officials and delegates to the celebration. After the reception, wreaths will be placed on memorials in various parts of the city in honor of famous inventors and national figures who have aided inventive progress.

Lincoln, Washington, Jefferson and Franklin, all of whom have inventions credited to them, will be so honored, and the memorial tablets to John Ericsson, near the Lincoln Memorial, to Joseph Henry, near the Smithsonian Institution, and Samuel F. B. Morse, near the old General Postoffice, will also be decorated.

Banquet at Mayflower.

The final and evening session will consist of banqueting and speeches at the Hotel Mayflower. Among the speakers will be Charles F. Kettering, director of research for the General Motors Corporation and inventor of ignition systems and lighting devices, Dr. Frank B. Jewett, president of the Bell Telephone Laboratories, and Wallace R. Lane, of Chicago, internationally known authority on patent law.

Guests at the celebration are expected from all parts of the country. Special local delegations from the larger cities are being organized in Washington, New York City, Philadelphia, Boston, Pittsburgh, Detroit, Cleveland, Dayton and Chicago.

The wing of the Department of Commerce Building assigned to the Patent Office is especially designed for efficient operation. The public search room and scientific library are on the ground floor, easily accessible to inventors and attorneys. The search room of the old offices was on the third floor.

Examiners in the new building are provided with individual, partitioned space. High ceilings are a relief from the old rooms, some of which were designed solely to house models.

Applications for patents run about 80,000 per year, and amended applications amount to more than 200,000 annually.

The United States produces about two-thirds of the world's patentable inventions. This has been made possible largely through the patent law of 1836, which provided for a force of skilled and trained examiners and threw upon the patent office the burden of determining patentability. The law also provided, for the first time in any country, an adequate means to protect inventor's rights by giving patents a prima facie standing of validity. Senator John Ruggles, of Maine, was responsible for this law.

Special Storage Chambers.

Special storage chambers, in the new building, for copies of issued patents are centralized below the main floor instead of being scattered in seven different places as in the old quarters. The office issues about 7,000,000 copies annually, 22,000 each working day, a volume which was kept up during the process of removal. The new storage space provides almost two acres of floor space on two levels, with up-to-date filing cabinets, index systems and devices that aid in filling orders and distributing.

The first patent was granted July 31, 1790, to Samuel Hopkins, on a method of making "pot and pearl ashes."

George Washington, with whose bicentennial the Patent Office celebration coincides, was himself an inventor. He made several improvements on plows and invented the "dinner coaster."

The outstanding ten inventions of recent years are (according to W. I. Wymann, of the Patent Office), the electric furnace, steam turbine, internal combustion motor, moving pictures, airplane, wireless, vacuum tube, induction motor, linotype and electric welding. A secondary list includes television, flotation recovery from low grade ores, the cyanide process for recovery of gold, synthetic methanol (wood alcohol), synthetic ammonia, artificial silk, artificial lacquers, hydrogenation of oils, gasoline cracking, invention of special metal alloys, mehanical refrigeration, air conditioning and automatic machinery in general.

Democrats' Keynoter Looms Large in Party

Barkley, of Kentucky, Is Self-Made Man; Just Beginning Climb.

By DAVID RANKIN BARBEE.

Ol' Judge Priest sneezed one of his loudest sneezes. It would have taken first prize in any sneezing contest at any county fair in his beloved Kentucky. The courthouse gang heard it four blocks away, and made wisecracks about it, for the sneezing of the old magistrate whom Irvin Cobb has made famous—or who, perhaps it should be said, made Irvin Cobb famous—was known to every little urchin in Paducah. Everybody in town heard that sneeze except the judge's law clerk, who either was so accustomed to it that it made no impression on him, or else was so absorbed in his work that he was oblivious to every noise that circulated about him.

"Alben," said the old judge quietly, looking at his young law clerk over the rims of his iron-bound specs.

There was no response.

Grasping his little bleached-out yellow billy-goatee in the first and second fingers of his right hand, and scratching his chin with his thumb, the old judge spit into the fireplace and then cleared his throat with a loud roar that would have made a lion roar back at him in envy.

"Alben," he again called, this time with a louder note in his voice.

Still there was no response from the studious law clerk.

Judge Priest threw his legs down from the table to the floor, pushed back his old hickory-bottomed chair in which he had sat for 40 years, rose to his feet and waddled over to his law clerk. Grasping him by the shoulder he gave him a rude shake. The abstracted law clerk, now startled, looked up with scared eyes. He rose quickly to his feet, for he was of the race of cavaliers to whom politeness is almost a byword.

"Alben, gimme a chew of tobacco."

When the old judge had torn about half of the twist in two and placed his quid snugly inside of one cheek, he grasped his billy-goatee in the fingers of his left hand and spit with sure aim out of the window.

ALBEN W. BARKLEY.

"I'm sorry I did not hear you when you spoke the first time," said the young law clerk. "I hope you will forgive me, sir. I was deeply interested in this book."

"What book?"

"'The Reign of Law.'"

Now Kentuckians are more clannish than any race of people on earth. They are not a boastful people, but they are mighty proud of their own.

"That's a good book, Alben. I think Jim Allen outdid himself when he wrote it."

The young law clerk blushed until his face and his red freckles were one mass of flame.

"Oh, sir," he said, "you mistake me. This is the Duke of Argyle's great work on jurisprudence. It is not our Kentucky writer's novel."

As the old judge waddled back to his hickory bottomed chair he was mumbling something to himself that sounded like this: "That boy will be

GREATER FAME SEEN FOR PEARY'S NAME IN DISTANT AGES

Lack of Dramatic Personality Has Dimmed Renown of North Pole Discoverer.

MUCH OVERSHADOWED BY BRILLIANCE OF BYRD

Methods Employed by Men Differed Greatly; Science to Reappraise Peary.

By DAVID RANKIN BARBEE.

A whole generation has passed since Admiral Robert E. Peary discovered hte North Pole, the twenty-third anniversary of which event took place last Wednesday at 10 o'clock in the morning, and there are scoffers still among us who deny him his greatest achievement.

Of the five others who composed his party on the final dash to the pole only one, his Negro servant, Matt Henson, is said to be alive. Peary died, we know; but what became of his four young Esquimaux? Perhaps "the Almighty Devil," whom they so much feared, has gathered them in his warm igloo, and there they are having a heck of a time.

Dr. Frederick Cook, who also "discovered" the pole, and by his prior return to civilization with his blatant announcement took the edge off Peary's exploit, is yet among us. The last heard of that gentleman of marvelous endurance and vivid imagination was that he was in Chicago trying to recoup his fortunes and hoping to "prove" that he beat Peary to the goal at the top of the world.

Capt. "Bob" Bartlett, who commanded the Arctic steamer Roosevelt and who marched with Peary in sight of the pole and was turned back, is a perennial visitor to Washington. Once a year he lectures before the National Geographic Society, perhaps its most popular lecturer. There is no chance of his ever dying—at least not for a long, long time to come.

Peary Modest Showman.

It was Capt. Bartlett, a British man, who was the stumbling block to Peary's poularity. Perhaps that is hardly the word. Peary never dazzled the American mind and imagination. He was no showman. He had done a great thing, and should have been hailed in a great way, and yet he is even now best remembered for repeating what William H. Vanderbilt first said: "The public be d——ned!"

His lectures on his great exploit should have made him wealthy; but few went to hear him. His book, "The North Pole," should have earned him a fortune, but it was a "flop." Every nation in the world was acclaiming him except his own, and when a grateful administration sought to honor him, even the service which he had so signally honored—our Navy never, me judice, had a greater man—fought bitterly the movement to bestow this honor on him.

Let us come forward a few years and see how it fared with another arctic explorer in the very same service. Richard Evelyn Byrd made an airplane voyage over the North Pole. It was a great achievement in aeronautics. When he returned to his own country only Lindbergh had ever received such an ovation. He wrote a book about his exploit of a few hours and it sold by the hundred thousand copies. He lectured over the country and they mobbed his lecture hall. When it was proposed to make him an admiral, the Navy pushed it along.

The Cause of Bitter Feeling.

No scientist would place the achievement of Admiral Byrd alongside the achievement of Admiral Peary, and because the former has personality and the latter lacked it, the former eats wheaten bread and the latter buttered his bitter crust with his tears. And all because he turned "Bob" Bartlett back when the goal was in sight.

It matters not that it was laid down on the program before they started on that great trek that "Bob" Bartlett should turn back when he had distanced all other explorers; it matters not that Peary never acted through jeaousy or low envy or unwillingness to share his glory with another white man; the world then believed he was a man of a mean heart and the world has almost forgotten him because that tradition grew up.

Now there was this difference between Byrd and Peary: The great explorer lacked tact, lacked vision, and did not have the right kind of imagination. He planned his last expedition from a life's efforts to reach the Pole and from a life's study of other men's failures. It was a cold piece of intellectual planning, a purely scientific scheme, from which all human warmth was banned. What it needed to make it 100 per cent glorious was the generous human touch which the very greatest men always have and which many medocre men not seldom show.

Different With Byrd.

If Byrd had been in command of that party, he never would have turned Bartlett back. He would have said something like this: "Bob, we have come through this thing thus far in good shape. Maybe if we stretch our legs a bit we can make it to the Pole and back with what food we have, and then both of us will have the glory of reaching the Pole."

When Byrd flew over the South Pole, did he not do just such a thing? He threw away his party's supply of food that they might top the mountains and reach their goal. I doubt if Peary would have thrown away the food. He probably, iron man that he was, would have turned back.

It was cruel to blame him for something he could not help; and it is cruel now for any of us to think less kindly of him than we should, for he was a great man and he did a great thing, and it was an American who did it.

He did mighty well for a man who was fed on codfish milk when he was a baby and on codfish balls when he

CANE WASTE GIVES NEW RAYON SOURCE

Discovery Believed Big Aid to Manufacturers Because of Wane in Wood.

(Associated Press.)

Sugar cane waste has been turned by the Agriculture Department into a new source of rayon—a silky dress material for the women.

Department chemists, using low-priced nitric acid, succeeded in developing a process by which high-grade cellulose, base material for rayon, is produced from bagasse, the waste from sugar cane after the sugar has been extracted.

The discovery is regarded as important as most rayon manufacturers depend upon wood pulp for cellulose and the American forests and wood supplies are gradually diminishing.

Sugar cane mills accumulate between 250,000 and 500,000 tons of bagasse annually. Much of this material has been used in manufacturing insulating building material. Other quantities have been used as fuel in the mills.

D. F. J. Lynch and M. J. Goss, of the color and farm waste division of the department's Bureau of Chemistry and Soils, made the experiments with bagasse and nitric acid.

The method, known as the nitric acid pulping process, consists of soaking the raw material in a weak nitric acid solution for several hours at a medium temperature, then heating it for an hour and finally washing and boiling in dilute sodium hydroxide to produce a soft, bleachable pulp.

The process increases the potential value of bagasse, and at the same time offers a new and steady source of raw material for the rayon industry. The department regards the process as now developed to a point where commercial interests can work out the practical problems of manufacture.

CHACO PARLEY SET AS ARMIES MENACE

Meeting of Neutrals Called Tomorow; Paraguay and Bolivia Troops Move.

(Associated Press.)

Chairman White of the Chaco negotiations yesterday asked Bolivian and Paraguayan delegates to meet with him, as the neutral representative, tomorrow.

The invitation to confer followed a two-hour conference yesterday at which the neutrals discussed alarming reports of military activity in the disputed area between the two countries.

In a press communique afterward the neutrals said frankly they were "much preoccupied" by the "alarming news of troop movements in the Chaco" and by the delay in the negotiations here, which have dragged since November 11, date of the first formal meeting to discuss a pact of nonaggression between the two countries.

A meeting of the neutrals has been scheduled to follow closely upon tomorrow's meeting of the two delegations. Yesterday's action of the five neutrals was taken as an indication of the fear of a possible impasse after the Paraguayans have presented their reply to the Bolivion rejection of Paraguay's counter-proposal. The Paraguayans have completed their reply, which is expected by observers to insist upon Bolivian withdrawal from present Chaco military positions.

It is known that official reports received here have largely confirmed press statements coming from the Chaco and border points. This information indicates that detachments of 500 to 1,000 Bolivian soldiers have been moving constantly from several garrisons to the Chaco regions, where a squad of 80 airplanes have been concentrated.

AIR LINES COMPLETE PIONEER OPERATIONS

Profits Encourage Making Plans to Advance in Commercial Field.

New York, April 9 (A.P.).—Leading aviation executives report that the industry has completed a pioneering stage of its work, and now hopes for steady progress in source commercial development.

The two-year ordeal of business dullness, they say, has touched the financial fiber of those companies which survived, and has helped, rather than harmed, in the necessary work of hewing down costs to actual needs. Waste is now at a minimum.

Four of the five largest groups in the aviation business did substantially better in 1931 than they did in 1930. Taking them as a unit, it can be said that the industry reduced its previous losses by millions of dollars and, in the case of United Aircraft Co., showed a substantial net profit for the year.

Aviation Corporation, of Delaware, which controls the American Airways system, reported after writing off a $2,022,000 loss on sale of securities, a deficit of $3,205,000 against one of $4,703,000 the year before. Transcontinental Air Transport, Inc., which controls the Maddux Air Lines and Western Air, reported net loss of $90,000 against a loss of $895,000 the year before. Curtiss-Wright Corporation reported net loss of $4,126,000, or less than half its 1930 loss of $9,012,000.

Pan-American Airways and its subsidiary companies, operating in the Latin-American field, reported net income of $105,000 against a deficit of $305,000 the year before, marking the first time in its history that the system had returned a profit.

United Aircraft came through the year showing net income of $2,907,000 against $3,302,000 the year before. These figures show that the four companies went through 1931 with a combined net loss of $4,409,000, which compares with a combined net loss of $11,613,000 the year before.

American companies operating in this country now have over 40,000 miles of regular air routes, and the Pan-American Airways Co., which represents a joint effort of the

30 NATIONS TO SEEK SECRETS OF NATURE

Scientists Are Preparing to Probe Sea and Sky for One Entire Year.

(Associated Press.)

Whoever uses a telephone, flies in a plane, owns a radio or wonders about tomorrow's weather will benefit from a world-wide probe of nature's secrets to begin four months from now.

In 30 nations the world around, scientists are oiling up instruments, studying maps and gathering equipment, ready to set forth in more than 100 expeditions to Arctic wastes, tropical jungles and lonely mountain peaks for intensive studies planned for the "international polar year."

Congress has just authorized the United States to take part in the polar year program, and it is expected funds will be appropriated to pay expenses of an American expedition.

Charting the unseen in the heavens above and the earth beneath, which affect the whole world's nervous system of wires and cables—these are a few of the problems to be attacked during the polar year.

No obscure research in far-off, dusty corners of science will clutter work of the polar year. "Participation of the United States in the polar year program," Representative Edmund F. Erk, of Pennsylvania, told a committee of the House, "is a matter of vital interest to every citizen."

It is called the "polar year" because scientists will be studying the same thing at the same time for an entire year and much of the work will be done in the polar regions, but the program will extend to the temperate and tropic zones. The year will extend from August 1, 1932, to August 31, 1933.

The Arctic is important to science because it is the "radio crossroads" of the world and the birthplace of much of the weather that affects warmer countries.

Radio messages between America, Europe and Asia pass over the Arctic because that route is shorter than over the oceans. Little is known, however, about earth currents and magnetic conditions in that region, and these have an important influence on

Bonus Fight Being Waged in Capital Holds Attention of Nation's Newspapers

Consensus of Opinion Culled From Press Opposes Payment.

During the past week no subject has been accorded wider editorial notice in the American press than the problem of "adjusted compensation" for veterans of the World War. The subject will engage the attention of Congress during the next four or five days.

The New York World-Telegram, under the caption, "The Bonus Bill—A Warning to You," said: "Our Nation is in the red. That is the picture in Washington today. Into the picture steps the $2,000,000,000 bonus. That such a proposition should be brought forth at such a time seems unbelievable. But it is a fact. And by all the precedents of politics the bonus stands better than a 50-50 chance of passing, unless voters back home are heard from. * * * These lawmakers are scared. They are scared by a ghost that has stalked through all the pages of our history—a ghost that has never been laid, but one that can be laid when and if the great rank and file of American voters speak.

"It is regarded as political gospel that the veteran gets what he wants when he wants it. * * * It is that delusion among politicians, with its accompanying fear, which makes possible the proposal of this fantastic $2,000,000,000 expense at a time when this Nation, unless its budget is balanced, goes broke. * * * Make no mistake. * * * You pay the bill. * * * Cry 'Halt!' to this blanket bonus."

"To add to the present injurious uncertainty in industry and trade," the Chicago News declared, "congressional groups are reviving the plan, ruinous if carried into effect under present conditions, of authorizing further loans to veterans equal to the remaining 50 per cent of the face value of the adjusted compensation certificates which mature in 1945. At this critical time to contemplate making so heavy an extra draft upon the Treasury is folly. Any move in that direction must tend to counteract all the beneficial measures designed to remove deterrent influences and stimulate legitimate expansion of credit and enterprise. It is unbelievable that even the insurgents in the House can be so reckless as to persist in their demoralizing tactics. They can not afford to assume responsibility for producing the psychological phase of the depression, discouraging investment and crippling the Nation's credit."

"While some 250,000 veterans of the war are petitioning for a blanket grant under the name of a further loan on adjusted compensation, at least one post of the American Legion asks that bounty now being paid be withdrawn because it is inequitable," Milwaukee Journal observed. "The Ironwood, Mich., post has interested Representative James in repeal of the emergency officers' relief act, under which 6,300 former officers draw disability pay of from $125 to $312 a month. * * * An exactly opposite principle is manifested in the demand of the 250,000 petitioners for a blanket bonus payment under the name of a loan. * * * There was reason for making the original bonus plea general for all who were in the service. If the bonus was right, all who served should have had the bonus. But the original demand for a cash bonus has been met. Many veterans apparently do not understand this * * * If there is reason for a new claim by veterans, it ought to come in as a new claim and not as a pretended payment of something already promised. When such a new claim comes in, it will sit better with the rest of the country if it bears some relation to need, that is, if it is for those who have suffered and suffer now because of their war service. The day for blanket gratuities voted by congressmen afraid of an organized soldier vote is waning."

The New York Herald Tribune asserted: "The leaders of the legion have courageously rejected the handout proposed. But the radical elements in both parties care nothing for reason, or, it would seem, the financial safety of the Nation. They want money, plenty of money, and never mind what it is worth. Start the presses! The sound leaders on both sides of the House are fighting

Ape-Man's Eden Is Sought By Scientists in Himalayas

Yale Party Hunts for Area Where Anthropoid Ancestors of Race, According to One Theory, First Came Out of Trees.

New Haven, Conn., April 9 (A.P.).—The ape-man's Garden of Eden is sought in north India by a Yale University expedition announced tonight.

This Eden, if it existed, was a rough place, a dramatic alteration of the earth's face millions of years ago, which forced the ape-men out of their trees into a struggle for existence which evolutionists think developed human brains.

This "garden" was where now stands the "roof of the world." It was then a low-lying tropical forest. In vast geological alterations this forest rose thousands of feet, up into cold altitudes that changes the jungle into grassy plains. The apes instinctively clinging to the old site, were forced to the ground and to development of human characteristics.

If there was such a prehistoric event it is believed that examination of the rocks and bones of animals there today will reveal the story. This geological and biological search is the objective of the Yale expedition, which, the announcement states, has just arrived at Delhi, north India.

The leader is Prof. Hellmut de Terra, research associate in geology at Yale. Assisting are Dr. G. E. Hutchinson, zoologist, and George E. Lewis, fellow of the department of geological sciences. They start in the Salt Range, 80 miles south of the Himalayas, which geologists say was covered with glaciers 240 millions years ago. They will proceed into the Himalayas and Western Tibet planning to explore for a year.

"So far as man is concerned," says the statement, "here is the theory;

COLLEGE TO HONOR WASHINGTON GIFT

Lexington Institution Recalls Tuesday Its Endowment by First President.

Special to The Washington Post.

Lexington, Va., April 9.—Many American institutions are looking back to George Washington with grateful eyes in his Bicentennial year, and among them is a college here, which Tuesday will attempt to fix in the Nation's consciousness the memory of Washington's important gifts to education.

Washington and Lee University, the lone school where his endowment endures, has set aside a full day for a commemorative program in gratitude for his patronage, and with a wish to paint a new picture of Washington—a picture of the man who wrote to the trustees of Washington Academy, in 1798: "To promote literature in this rising empire and to encourage the arts have ever been amongst the warmest wishes of my heart."

The history of the university here is studded with illustrious names, and its campus marked frequently with historic signals, but none is more revered than the memory of the Washington relationship. At the same time it is not intended—as one authority expresses it—"to suggest that George Washington endowed Washington and Lee University with that immortal intimacy which Thomas Jefferson bequeathed to his university," nor to give the impression that he was an "educator" in the full sense of the term.

Washington's University Plans.

Washington's first thoughts on education were always concerned with his plans, which never flowered, for a "rational university." His gift to the Lexington school was comparatively incidental, yet it became his only endowment to endure, and from the university's point of view the most important financial impetus that it ever received. During the dark days of reconstruction, Washington's gift—now valued at $50,000—was half of the total endowment of the university.

The story of the university shows the real proportions of the 100 shares in the James River Co., which the first President presented to it in 1796. Augusta Academy was opened in 1749 at Timber Ridge, a few miles from here, by two Princeton graduates. Sam Houston's father lived there and gave land and wood.

The little academy was active in 1772, when at Mount Vernon a painter named Charles Wilson Peale was doing a portrait of "the Virginia Colonel." This painting now hangs in Lee Chapel on the campus here. Six weeks before the Declaration of Independence was signed, the trustees met with a burst of patriotic fervor and changed the name to Liberty Hall Academy. The town of Lexington was founded the following year, and in 1780 Liberty Hall was removed there.

Name Changed Again.

A stone building, the remains of which stand above the present Washington and Lee athletic field, was erected in 1793, three years before Washington announced his decision to give the James River stock to Liberty Hall.

The trustees changed the name to Washington Academy in 1798, 135 years ago Tuesday, and Washington wrote thanking them for their "politeness." In the same year his formal deed of the stock was conveyed to the college, a document which was found a few days ago, after having been lost for possibly 60 years.

In 1802 the college building was destroyed by fire, and classes met in the town while the first structure on the present site—across Woods Creek—was erected. During the same year came the announcement of another large gift, the first of many to come, influenced by Washington's lead. His soldiers, the Virginia Society of the Cincinnati, decided to disband, and they donated $25,000 of their funds to Washington Academy. The professorship in mathematics is founded on this appropriation.

Name Changed in 1813.

An act of legislature changed the name to Washington College in 1813. John Robinson, soldier under Washington, and a wealthy Rockbridge distiller, bequeathed a large sum to the college in 1826. Lewis Marshall, brother of John Marshall, was president from 1830 to 1834, and he startled the world with his experimental educational theories.

Gen. Robert E. Lee became president in 1865, and on his board of trustees was Cyrus Hall McCormick, who with his family was to become a chief donor after Washington's example. Mr. McCormick had invented the reaper a few miles away, while Mr. Marshall was head of the school. Gen. Lee anticipated the modern schools of commerce and journalism, inaugurating courses of study in both these fields.

It is the knowledge of this background which will determine the spirit of the ceremonies Tuesday, and perhaps create a new view of George Washington, patron of learning.

Trio Denies Poison Murder of Ashby

Plead Not Guilty to Giving Victim Acid in Whisky Near Staunton.

Staunton, Va., April 9 (A.P.).—A plea of not guilty was made today by John Myers, his wife, Lena, and William Smith, her brother, as they were arraigned in corporation court here on a charge of murdering Lacy R. Ashby.

They were indicted yesterday by a special grand jury which was called to investigate the case after the coroner rendered a verdict that Ashby died March 31 from swallowing corrosive acid.

The prosecution indicated it would attempt to show that the poison was given Ashby in whisky and that Myers, his wife and Smith were responsible for inviting or compelling Ashby to drink.

Deadline on Taxes Set for W., B. & A.

Railroad Receiver Cited to Act on $48,287 Bill by April 21.

Special to The Washington Post.

Baltimore, Md., April 9.—George Weems Williams, receiver for the Washington, Baltimore & Annapolis Railroad, has been given until April 21 to show cause why the company should not pay taxes amounting to $48,287 to the City of Baltimore and the State of Maryland.

The order was signed today by Judge William C. Coleman following the filing of a petition in the United States District Court by R. E. Lee Marshall, city solicitor on behalf of the Mayor and City Council of Baltimore. The petition lists taxes plus penalties and interest amounting to $25,481.71 for 1931, and taxes alone totaling $22,806.29 for 1932.

The Washington, Baltimore & Annapolis Railroad was placed in the hands of receivers in January, 1931, as was the Annapolis and Chesapeake Bay Power Co., a wholly owned subsidiary of the railroad. Mr. Williams was appointed receiver for the railroad and Albert G. Towers was named receiver for the power company.

Loudoun County Home Work Groups in Session

Special to The Washington Post.

Leesburg, Va., April 9.—The leaders of the Loudoun County home demonstration groups under the direction of Miss Penelope Morgan, county home demonstration agent, met in the Leesburg High School Auditorium today to make preparation for the April-May meetings of the groups in the various communities in the county.

The topic for the morning meeting was "How to Fit a Dress," which is the subject for the April meetings. The afternoon session was given over to the May meetings, "Dress Finishes and Trimmings." The meeting was held in order to train representatives from each home demonstration club to assist the agent in carrying on the work with local women.

VIRGINIA HIGHWAYS READY FOR BIG LOAD

Heavy Volume of Traffic Is Expected During Coming Garden Week.

Richmond, Va., April 9 (A.P.).—Virginia highways are expected to be in excellent condition to accommodate the caravans of automobiles to visit the State's famous gardens during Virginia Garden Week, April 25 to 30.

The highway department announced today that road conditions now are good, with the exception of a few short sections of construction which will cause little trouble.

On United States Route 1, Washington to Richmond, there is no construction and the road is in good shape. From Richmond to the North Carolina line some construction is under way, but not of a nature to seriously interfere with traffic.

Construction work under way elsewhere in the State is progressing rapidly, the Department said. On United States Route 29, construction work of surfacing with stone north of Amherst will be finished in about a week, and in the meantime traffic is accommodated over a detour paralleling the main highway. Soil surfacing on the same route south of Madison has been completed.

Grading on Route 307, south of Ben Creek, has been finished, and good progress has been made in the work on Route 13, between Amherst and Buckingham.

On United States Route 11, through the Shenandoah Valley, two sections of widening construction between Winchester and Staunton are a little rough in places, but cause no trouble. From Staunton to Roanoke and Roanoke to Bristol, the Valley pike is paved and clear of construction.

HOOVER MEETS FOES OF 60'S, NOW CHUMS

Veterans of Blue and of Gray Invite President to Park Dedication.

(Associated Press.)

With a warm handclasp, President Hoover rejoiced yesterday with two veterans of the 60's—one blue, one gray—in the well healed scars of a civil war.

The veterans, Capt. Carter Bishop, of Petersburg, Va., and Capt. Henry H. Comey, of Danvers, Mass., threw open the gates of Petersburg to the President for the dedication of a national military park there on June 20. Both are members of the Petersburg National Park Commission.

"Sixty-seven years ago today, Mr. President," said gray-caped Capt. Bishop, "Lee surrendered to Grant at Appomattox. Today Petersburg surrenders to you."

Opposing Warriors.

The 83-year old Virginian, who fought with the Virginia Military Institute Cadet Corps in '64 and '65, made his first informal speech to President Hoover when they were introduced.

"These two gentlemen," said Walter Newton, White House secretary, "fought against each other, Mr. President."

"Yes," reflected Bishop, "but if he (indicating Capt. Comey) should be attacked now, I'd call out the whole Confederate army." Capt. Bishop is commander of the United Confederate Veterans in Virginia.

Reporters surrounded them as they entered the White House and they submitted to a photographic barrage as they left. One reporter asked the Massachusetts soldier his age.

Proud of 92 Years.

"I was born March 4, 1840," he said. "That makes 92," some one observed. The captain was quick to speak. "I'm in my ninety-third year," he boasted.

They were taken to their interview with the President along with others of a delegation from Petersburg by Representative Drewry.

The group included Maj. Arthur Kilbourne, of the regular Army, third member of the park commission; Mayor John R. Jolly; Franklin Smith, chairman of the Petersburg citizens' committee which secured funds for buying the park property; E. H. Crutchfield, president of the chamber of commerce, and Capt. W. A. Smith, representing the American Legion.

The park will be dedicated the day before the annual reunion of Confederate veterans opens at Richmond, less than 30 miles away.

Dry Law Evidence Illegally Obtained

Thacher's Supreme Court Memorandum Backs Taylor's Appeal.

(Associated Press.)

The evidence on which John Vance Taylor, of Baltimore, was convicted of violating the prohibition law was held yesterday by Solicitor General Thacher to have been illegally obtained. He filed this memorandum in the Supreme Court where Taylor is seeking to have his conviction reviewed.

The evidence was obtained by Federal prohibition agents who, without a warrant, searched Taylor's garage at the rear of his residence on Curtis Bay. They found in the garage 122 cases of white corn whisky. Solicitor General Thacher had opposed a review of the case by the highest court on account of certain technicalities. The Department of Justice did not believe, he stated, the prohibition agents were legally justified in searching the garage without a warrant.

"We believe the search was unreasonable and the defendant's conviction unwarranted," the solicitor general stated, "but do not formally confess error because we feel that where a conviction of a criminal offense has been affirmed in a circuit court of appeals judgment of conviction should not be reversed except by this court after examination of the record. Accordingly, we submit the case for decision."

The college said that between now and June the post would be filled by the college registrar, aided, if necessary, by members of the faculty.

Mr. Bacon said before leaving that he expects to spend the summer with his family at Cape Cod, Mass., as has been their custom for several years and that he was not certain what he would do next fall.

Before leaving he was given a vote of confidence by the student body, who presented a petition to the board protesting the actions in refusing to continue him as dean.

More Counties Cut Taxes in Virginia

Reductions Are Effected Under New Byrd Road Legislation.

Richmond, Va., April 9 (A.P.).—A continuation of the canvass of counties from Richmond today indicated that the localities are adjusting local machinery to the operation of the recently enacted Byrd road plan.

Further check indicated that Franklin County was planning to cut taxes $1.10 on the hundred. This was said to be 40 cents short of the $1.50 promised by the Byrd plan. The supervisors were reported as contending that 30 cents must be retained to retire road indebtedness and 10 cents must be added to the school levy.

An expected 25 cents reduction was reported in Prince Edward County on the road levy in addition to a 15-cent cut in the school levy. In Sussex County and Prince George, reductions were anticipated.

The suit follows an auditor's report of a shortage in the funds of Sheriff W. W. Williams. Of this amount $9,500 was taken from the sheriff by bandits in a bold holdup.

U. S. WOMAN TRIES SUICIDE IN FRANCE

Found in Hotel With Wrist Slashed; Her Mother, in Capital, Shocked.

Mrs. Ella Mae Bjorkman, 32, of Asheville, N. C., was taken to a Nice (France) hospital yesterday after she was found in her hotel room with her left wrist slashed, according to an Associated Press dispatch. She is the daughter of Mrs. Elizabeth Pease, of 121 Third street northeast.

"If today there is nothing else left, I will exist no more," a note which was found in the hotel room said. At the hospital she was said to be in critical condition.

According to her mother, Mrs. Pease, Mrs. Bjorkman sailed for France on March 4 as a secretary to a writer on women's fashions and had also planned to write on her own account while she was abroad. Mrs. Pease could give no explanation for her daughter's apparent despondency.

Her husband, Edwin Bjorkman, Swedish writer, editor and translator, said yesterday in Asheville that he could think of no reason for his wife's act "unless she was out of funds and ashamed to ask for them," according to the Associated Press.

The Bjorkmans were married in 1930, the dispatch said. Bjorkman expected his wife to return in May.

Fight for Eastern District Attorneyship Is Looming; Kear Is Favored.

(Associated Press.)

Another race for a Federal plum in Virginia appeared imminent yesterday with three names to the fore.

For the eastern district attorneyship, made vacant Friday by resignation of Robert H. Talley, of Richmon, Maj. Paul W. Kear, of Norfolk, and Callom B. Jones and Cyrus W. Beale, of Richmond, were known to be under consideration. A fourth, Hugh Holland, of Suffolk, was mentioned, but only casually.

Vacating of the office by Talley caused opening of two old wounds—rivalry of Norfolk and Richmond for presidential favor and antagonism of the Anderson and Slemp factions of the Republican party.

Fierce Battle Just Over.

Republican leaders are grieved this has happened. They had just smoothed their hair after a fierce fight in the State convention, and it was only a few weeks ago that rival factions in the Norfolk District were brought together after considerable time on George S. Pitman for marshal.

Although the judge, marshal and clerk of the eastern court district are all Norfolk men and Richmond is jealous of this, Maj. Kear appeared yesterday to be the most favored of those mentioned.

The Justice Department is urging his appointment, since it is desired to incorporate Kear's present office, Assistant Attorney General, with the district attorneyship in the general Federal economy drive. As Assistant Attorney General, Kear is prosecuting condemnation cases in Virginia.

Many Cases Behind.

The Justice Department also desires an experienced Federal prosecutor—the office is several hundred cases behind—and Kear has had eight years in the job, before being appointed Assistant Attorney General.

Further, he is acceptable to the powers that recommend Virginia appointments.

The barrier raised against him is the desire of Republicans in Richmond for recognition. They were palliated when Talley was appointed a year ago and they now wish to keep the job.

Favorable to Kear.

Factional rivalry at Richmond, however, seems favorable to Kear.

Jones, one-time candidate for Virginia attorney general and long an assistant United States attorney, was an active supporter of Henry W. Anderson for national committeeman in the contest that resulted last Saturday in virtual defeat of Anderson for the office by forces of C. Bascom Slemp, present committeeman.

Slemp, also chief patronage dispenser for the State, answered a question about Jones' acceptability with the statement:

"This talk of factions is all bunk."

Beale Believed Acceptable.

Whether or not Jones would be approved by Slemp is speculative. Beale, on the other hand, is believed acceptable to him, but another strong element in the party has indicated disfavor of that nomination. Beale is a Richmond attorney in private practice and was Virginia director of the 1930 census.

Both Slemp and Representative Lankford, of Norfolk, said yesterday there was nothing to tell in connection with the appointment. They have conferred regarding it.

GOLDSTEIN GAINS NATIONAL COLLEGIATE BOXING TITLE; JOHNSON SAYS NATS ARE READY FOR 1932 PENNANT RACE

Cronin Only Uncertain Figure

Likely to Miss Opener; Crowder to Pitch Tomorrow.

Weaver and Fischer Face Buffalo in Game Today.

By FRANK H. YOUNG.

IRRESPECTIVE of whether or not rain forces the Nationals to idle this afternoon, when they are listed to end their exhibition schedule with a tilt with the Buffalo Bisons, of the International League, Manager Walter Johnson declared last night that his team is ready for tomorrow's season's inaugural against the Boston Red Sox.

"With the exception of Shortstop Joe Cronin, all of the boys are ready to go," Johnson stated last night. "Of course, there are one or two rough spots to be eliminated in our play and I was sorry that bad weather kept us out of action against the Orioles. I certainly hope that we will be able to meet the Bisons tomorrow. You know, with the boys in good physical condition, what they need now is competitive action and I was counting strongly on using this trio of final exhibition games as opportunities for us to brush up on signals and to help us polish up for the games that count.

Cronin May Miss Opening Game.

"If we are able to play Sunday, I'm planning to have Montie Weaver and Carl Fischer divide the pitching duties. Cronin has made rapid improvement and is due to be discharged from the hospital tomorrow. I'd like to have him in that line-up starting the regular season, but right now believe it would be wiser for me to give him a couple of days of rest before calling on him.

"Cronin is the sparkplug of our infield and there is no question but what the whole team plays better when he is in the game. I'd rather keep him out a couple of days for safety's sake, however, than to call on him while he is still in a weakened condition and take a chance on a possible lengthy setback. I'll wait until I see Joe before I decide on his case, though."

Alvin Crowder will start on the hill for the Nationals when the season starts tomorrow, the Nat leader stated, indications being that "The General" is just about ready—which means a lot to the home team.

Crowder's Condition Pleasing.

Previously, Crowder apparently has had a complex that he could not pitch winning ball until May 15 or later, but the powers that be of the club started to work on him in deadly earnest this spring and every indication is that he is in better shape now than he has been at any other season's opener since he first came up to the majors. Roy Spencer, rated as just about as good as any receiver in the league, will be behind the bat, with Danny MacFayden the likely starting hurler for the Red Sox.

Of particular interest to home fans is the fact that the veteran Joe Judge has regained—temporarily, at least—his berth as regular first sacker. This is a distinct upset of the winter dope. When he was kept on the bench following his return after an emergency appendicitis operation last May, and Joe Kuhel, a most promising rookie, continued in the game, Johnson intimated that, in view of Judge's age, he figured the development of Kuhel was his best bet.

Judge May Hold Regular Post.

When training camp was reached this spring, it was stated that Judge was to get a fifty-fifty chance, but at the same time it was noted that Kuhel drew all of the game assignments and that Judge was even left behind on some of the trips. Finally Kuhel injured a hand, Judge was necessarily given his chance, and he has been the regular again ever since. And Johnson intimated last night that he will hold his job as long as he delivers.

If Cronin does not start tomorrow, Johnny Kerr will fill his shoes, with Ossie Bluege covering third and Buddy Myer on second, as usual. The starting fly-chasers will be Heinie Manush in left, Sam West in center, and Carl Reynolds at Sam Rice's old station in right. Kerr and Reynolds came here last winter in the deal which sent Pitchers Irving Hadley and Sam Jones and Infielder Jack Hayes to the White Sox.

All arrangements have been completed for the inaugural tomorrow. The gates will be thrown open at 11 o'clock, at which time the first arrivals of the 30,000 or more fans are expected to start filing into the park.

Band to Greet President.

A band has been engaged from noon until 2:30 o'clock to help Comedians Altrock and Schacht entertain the early comers, with the Army Band scheduled to march on the field at 2:30. Fifteen minutes later, President and Mrs. Herbert Hoover are due to take their seats and, after the usual march to the flagpole, where Secretary of the Treasury Ogden Mills will hoist Old Glory, the Chief Executive will toss out the first ball and the major league baseball season will be officially on. This will be the only big league game played tomorrow, as the other

Some 250,000 Fans to See Start of Big League Races

Baseball Looks to Thrilling Pennant Chases for Success; Most Clubs Radically Changed; Mack Stands Pat.

By ALAN GOULD
(Associated Press Sports Editor).

NEW YORK, April 9 (A.P.).—Featuring the fanfare and pageantry for which it has long been famous, major league baseball's big show sounds the overture next week for a prospective upturn in the big business of American sport.

As the traditional backbone of the Nation's athletic enterprise, it has been carefully treated for weak spots and injected with new blood for a campaign that will put its vitality and stability to a severe test.

The prospects, meanwhile, are for an auspicious as well as gala get-away. The Nation's Chief Executive, Herbert Hoover, will make the first official gesture by throwing out the ball for the prelude, to be played by Boston and Washington Clubs at the Capital on Monday afternoon. The tumult and roar will echo all along the major league fronts on Tuesday, when all sixteen clubs swing into action to the accompaniment of parades, flag hoisting and band playing.

All told, upward of 250,000 fans are expected to witness the nine opening games listed for the two days. This would compare favorably with the record turnout of 249,000 for the eight inaugural contests of 1931.

The largest of Tuesday's crowds—40,000—is expected to jam Brooklyn's enlarged park for the jolly Dodgers' coming out party against the Boston Braves. More than 30,000 likely will see the New York Yankees fire their first challenge at the Athletics in Philadelphia, while as many more watch the St. Louis Cardinals, world champions, make their first home stand against the Pittsburgh Pirates.

From 15,000 to 35,000, with a good "break" in the weather, should witness each of the other openers. Washington and Boston, after entertaining the presidential party, journey to the hub for another ceremonial affair Tuesday. The other American League engagements Tuesday are: Cleveland at Detroit, St. Louis at Chicago; National League, Philadelphia at New York, Chicago at Cincinnati.

Although the clubs of both leagues have put into force a program of rigid economy, with pay rolls and player limits reduced, they depend for prosperity chiefly upon the hope of closer and more exciting pennant races.

Court Body Adopts Two Rule Changes

Time Limits Set on Holding Ball in Order to Speed Up Game.

New York, April 9 (A.P.).—In an effort to speed up the game, the national basket ball rules committee today adopted the recommendation of the coaches requiring the offensive team to advance the ball past the center of the court within 10 seconds after obtaining possession of the ball.

The committee also adopted a rule providing that a player standing in the foul line or free throw circle with his back to the basket must pass the ball within 3 seconds. This was aimed at the elimination of the so-called blocking pivot.

The committee made no changes in the rules covering the shooting of fouls, feeling that the two new rules adopted would speed up the game to such an extent that the time called for free throws would not be noticed.

English, of Cubs, Out With Broken Finger

Kansas City, April 9 (A.P.).—Cub hopes suffered a blow today when it was revealed the shortstop Woody English, had a broken finger and would be out of the game for possibly a month.

English injured the index finger of his right hand, a week ago. It pained him today and an X-ray revealed the fracture.

TERRIOR SELLS FOR $4,000

Chicago, April 9 (A.P.).—The highest known price ever given in America for a wire-haired fox terrier, $4,000, was paid today by Forrest N. Hall, of Dallas, Tex., to Walter M. Toole, of Des Moines, Ia., for his champion Westbourne Teetoler.

Champion Westbourne Teetoler has been shown fourteen times in America and was declared best of all breeds at ten shows. It is 3 years old.

District Pin Loop Led by McPhilomy

Lucky Strike Star Succeeds Hiser; Boasts 120.55 Average.

Earl McPhilomy has succeeded Henry Hiser as king of the District Bowling League, according to the official averages released last night. The Earl led Lucky Strike to third place in the loop, mauling the maples for a 75-game average of 120-55. He barely succeeded in nosing out Hokie Smith, King Pin ace, who averaged 120-53 for the grind. McPhilomy scored 66 strikes, 213 spares, a high game of 160, and a new all-time league set record of 447 in compiling his average. Notwithstanding this sterling performance, he failed to equal the 121-10 mark hung up by Henry Hiser last year.

McPhilomy also maintained an average of 121-31 in the National Capital League, but both Astor Clarke and Maxie Rosenberg topped him in this circuit. Clark established a record for this league with his average of 122-38. Rosenberg, captain of the Northeast Hupmobile team, was second with 122-10.

"Reds" Megaw's slump, which occurred in the final month of play, cost him the championship and probably a new record.

Londos-Pinetzki Match At Auditorium Thursday

Turner Schedules Major Bout as Surprise; Polish Giant to Have 80 Pounds on Greek Wrestling King.

JIM LONDOS will meet Leon Pinetzki at the Washington Auditorium Thursday night. The match, announced yesterday, looms as the most important grappling contest Matchmaker Joe Turner has ever been able to lure into the Washington Auditorium.

It was thought by the boys who know their wrestling that the mat powers were saving Londos and Pinetzki for the outdoor season, and the announcement that the tableau would be put on in Washington first comes both as a surprise and a high commentary of the place Washington holds in the Eastern pachyderm precincts.

Pinetzki outweighs Londos by 80 pounds, is a foot and a half taller and his 8-foot armspread is considerably more than that of the generally recognized champion. The Polish Corridor, after three months of paluka stalking, during which he went undefeated, ran up against Dick Shikat two weeks ago in New York and was thrown. The result was duplicated last week in Philadelphia, but the Pole's popularity is not likely to be impaired. His physical appearance is enough of a side show, and a loss to Shikat is felt to be no disgrace by most followers of the game.

Promoter Joe Turner has dug deep into Bowser talent for the rest of his show. Tony DeVito, one of the best of the other boys, will be on the card against George McLeod. It was originally planned to have the big Italian meet Londos. The Italian claims victories over Sonnenberg, De Glane and an hour draw with Londos three years ago.

Howard Cantonwine, who springs from the great corn belt and rassling section of the country, will meet George Hagen, while Oscar Negrin's first appearance with the Curley growlers will be against George Manich.

Fred Grobmeier is down on the books again for a return match with Frank Speers, former gridman. The last time the two fought it appeared that Speers was going to break Grobmeier's mile long winning streak here but he sailed out of the ring on a flying tackle and alighted on a sensitive spot on the back of his head

Eastman Sets World Mark In "880"

Stanford Star Runs Half-Mile Course in 1:51.3.

Dr. Peltzer's Time Is Beaten by Three-Tenth Seconds.

By RUSSELL J. NEWLAND.

STANFORD University, Calif., April 9 (A.P.).—Four thousand fans cheered Big Ben Eastman, Stanford's greatest track star, on to a new world's record in the 880-yard run, here today. On the same track where two weeks ago he shattered the 16-year-old quarter-mile mark, the gangling blond speedster doubled the distance and ran two perfectly timed laps to finish in 1:51.3. This is three-tenths of a second faster than the accepted record made in 1926 by Dr. Otto Peltzer, of Germany.

Enormous strides carried him over the ground in almost effortless fashion. He held the pole position and was off to a perfect start. At 220-yards he was clocked in 24 seconds flat. The timers caught him at 53 3-10 seconds for the quarter. At 660-yards he was unofficially timed at 1:18.3. The American record at this distance is 1:20.4, made by Homer Baker.

Four timers, representatives of the Amateur Athletic Union agreed on his record-breaking run today. The corps of clockers were Dr. Frank Angell, Merrill Andrus, Al Katchinski and Frank Geis. The usual precautions were taken and a wind gauge on the field indicated a breeze of 2.7 miles per hour during the first quarter and one of 2.1 for the second quarter.

Nine Start in Race.

Nine started in the race, but after the first 50 yards the bespectacled youth might just as well have been running alone. He drew away from the opposition steadily and broke the tape a full 40 yards ahead of the second place man.

Eastman's record-shattering run was the result of a perfectly executed plan. In practice runs up to 660 yards he had been easing up too much on the third 220 yards. He watched his pace carefully today and as a result had some 33 seconds in which to run the last furlong.

A fortnight ago Big Ben whizzed around the old Stanford oval in 46.4 seconds to better by 1 full second the mark Ted Meredith set in 1916.

The 6-foot youngster was utterly modest about his achievement. After the race, while photographers and motion picture news reel men surrounded him, he told interviewers "it was a hard run." He said he didn't realize he was breaking the record, no more than he did when he ran his great quarter-mile two weeks ago.

"Tying Up" at Finish.

"I was 'tying up' at the finish," he said. Asked if he got a bigger thrill out of his 880-yard feat than he did from the record-smashing quarter-mile, Ben said he hadn't even thought about it.

Eastman's victory helped his team defeat the San Francisco Olympic Club and the University of San Francisco in a triangular meet. Stanford piled up 78 points to 69 for the club and 16 for U. S. F.

Colt, After Runaway, Wins in English Stake

Newbury, Eng., April 9 (A.P.).—Abbot's Worthy, V. T. Thompson's 4-year-old colt, today won the 23d running of the Newbury Spring Cup at 1 mile after bolting at the barrier and running away for a mile before he was caught.

His unscheduled run did not seem to hurt the son of Abbot's Brace—Pomsan as he won easily by a length and a half from Sir Abe Bailey's Trinidad with H. Eve's Venturer in third place a head back. Seventeen horses ran.

When Abbot's Worthy bolted he threw his jockey, Gordon Richards, but the little fellow was unhurt and climbed back into the saddle when the horse was caught and rode him to victory.

Goslin Introduces Camouflage Ball Bat

St. Louis, April 9 (A.P.).—The camouflage bat, designed to confuse the pitcher and fool the infield players, made its appearance in the hand of Goose Goslin in the city series game between the Browns and the Cardinals here today.

The bat is covered with black and white stripes running lengthwise. The stripes were not violent enough to rouse the Cardinal's objections, but Willis Johnson, secretary of the Browns and designer of the bat, said he plans a bat with wider stripes and more fantastic decorations if the idea works out.

Stripes or no stripes, Goslin made the first safe hit of the season here with the new stick.

Maryland U. In Double Victory

Krajcovic Wins Three Events for Maryland Trackmen.

UNIVERSITY OF MARYLAND won a double sports victory yesterday afternoon at College Park in a driving rainstorm, capturing a dual track from Washington and Lee, 67 2-3 to 58 1-3, and downing Washington College in lacrosse, 7 to 1. The contests were the first of the season for both Old Line teams. Rain forced a postponement of the baseball game listed with North Carolina.

Maryland's superiority in the field events was the deciding factor in the track meet. The Old Liners were outpointed, 34 to 38, in the eight track events, landing only three first places, but overwhelmed the Generals in the field, where they scored five firsts and tied for another.

Krajcovic Old Line Ace In Meet.

Jess Krajcovic was the Maryland ace, garnering first honors in the shotput, discus throw and broad jump and tying for third with two Generals in the high jump.

The Old Liners were extended in the first half of the lacrosse tilt, leading, 4 to 1, at the half. Two of the Maryland tallies came in the last ten minutes. In the second half the Eastern Shore team was completely outplayed, having possession of the ball only twice.

Ed Ronkin and Skippy Faber scored two goals to lead Maryland on attack. Others to register were Poppelman, Nordenholz and Stieber for the Old Liners and Chambers for the visitors.

Sen. Copeland Named G. U. Dinner Speaker

Senator Royal S. Copeland, of New York, has accepted an invitation to be one of the principal speakers at the eighth annual "Varsity G" dinner, which will be held by Georgetown University April 20 in the Willard Hotel.

Senator Copeland, a graduate of the University of Michigan Medical College, has always been interested in athletics.

General Chairman Thomas A. Cantwell reports gratifying progress on arrangements for the event which will be held in honor of Georgetown athletes, past and present. Award of the coveted "G" to those who performed for Georgetown prior to 1923 will be one of the features. Between 800 and 900 persons are expected to attend.

Nats' Opener April 20 If It Rains Tomorrow

In the event that rain spoils tomorrow's opening game between the Nationals and the Boston Red Sox, holders of couponed tickets for the event will have them honored on April 20, when the Griffmen will formally open their season, also against Boston.

President Hoover has agreed to attend the April 20 game if rain causes cancellation of tomorrow's play. Other ceremonies planned for tomorrow will be staged April 20 if rain intervenes.

SPRING GOLF DATES ARE LISTED

Congressional, Chevy Chase Plan for Big Seasons.

By HENRY LITCHFIELD WEST.

DR. BRUCE L. TAYLOR, chairman of the golf committee of the Congressional Country Club, last night announced plans for a gala opening of the club's golfing season on Wednesday, May 4. The main feature will be the official christening of the new tenth and eleventh holes, but there also will be an interesting program of golf events culminating in an informal get-together dinner in the evening.

The new tenth and eleventh holes were laid out by Donald Ross, the well-known golf architect. The new tenth, which succeeds the old 625-yard par 6-hole, plays from the peak of the hill near the eighteenth green across the newly developed lake and well beyond the old tenth fairway. It measures 440 yards and is a par 4 hole. The old tenth hole becomes the new eleventh and is a dog-leg 430 yards long, another par 4. The remainder of the back nine is played the same except that the short 110-yard sixteenth hole is eliminated.

Course Longer But Par Reduced.

Paradoxical as it may seem, the new Nos. 10 and 11 holes add 137 yards to the total yardage of the back nine, but par is reduced from 36 to 35, making 72 instead of 73 strokes par for the 18 holes. This unusual feature of the change in holes on the back nine is brought about by the fact that the old No. 10 and the old No. 16 measured a total of 733 yards and a par total of 9. The two new holes cover 870 yards and par for them aggregates 8. The old total yardage was 6,550 while the new is 6,687.

Prizes for those successful in the day's competition are to be presented at the informal dinner in the evening.

The golf committee of the Chevy Chase Club, consisting of Robert Stead, jr., chairman; A. McCook Dunlop, C. Ashmead Fuller and Richard P. Davidson, has announced the program of spring fixtures for 1932.

Competition for the French High Commission cup will begin on April 25 and continue until May 7, inclusive, and the annual spring invitation tournament, as already published, will be staged from May 17 to 19, inclusive. The club championship,

GOLF UPSET IS WON BY WARNER

Yale Junior Downs Ryerson, 5 and 3, at Pinehurst.

PINEHURST, N. C., April 9 (A.P.).—Playing a calm, methodical game that totally belied his lack of tournament experience, Milton Pierpont Warner, of Pine Orchard, Conn., gave John B. Ryerson, of Cooperstown, N. Y., a 5 and 3 lacing this afternoon to capture the thirty-second annual North and South amateur golf tournament here.

The sturdy Yale junior succeeds George T. Dunlap, of New York, intercollegiate champion, who did not defend his title this year.

Starting off nervously this morning, he lost the first two holes to Ryerson, but retrieved them later and wound up the first eighteen with a one hole lead.

It was a different story this afternoon. Ryerson lost his cunning, and repeatedly sent his ball spinning into traps, finally conceding the match on the thirty-third hole where Warner made a spectacular birdie two.

Except at the start of the match today, from watching them play, the average spectator would have imagined Ryerson, who won eight tournaments last year and one this year, was new to the game, and Warner the veteran.

This was Warner's second tournament. He was eliminated in the second round of the Connecticut State competition last year.

Italian Cup Netmen Clean Up Spaniards

Naples, Italy, April 9 (A.P.).—Prospective members of the Italian and Spanish Davis Cup teams engaged in practice today with the Italian team winning all four matches played.

Serterio defeated Ernest Maier, the Spanish champion, 2—6, 6—1, 7—5, 6—3; Palmieri won from Boter, 6—1, 6—1, 6—3; George de Stefani defeated A. Juanico, 6—2, 6—2, 9—7, and Rado beat Riera, 6—1, 6—1, 9—7.

Big Entry of French In Olympic Games

Paris, April 9 (A.P.).—The French Olympic committee today announced that France definitely would take part in the tenth olympiad at Los Angeles next summer and would send a team of between 60 and 70 competitors.

Tentative plans have been made for the team to sail July 4 for the States on the Lafayette.

Thousands of Children Enter Giant Sport Show

"Festival of Youth" on Bicentennial Program May 14 to Present Baseball, Track, Tennis, Canoeing and Other Games.

PROBABLY the most pretentious sport program in the history of Washington will be conducted on May 14, when the "Festival of Youth" will be held on the Monument grounds as part of the George Washington Bicentennial celebration.

If the plans of Miss Sibyl Baker, chairman of the festival, materialize, thousands of boys and girls will engage in the various games that play such a great part in their daily life. The crack of the baseball bat will vie with the thud of the volley ball and the whirr of the archer's arrow will be intermingled with the report of the starter's pistol at the beginning of track races.

Demonstrations of tennis by the leading juvenile players of the city will be rivaled by the minature paddle tennis contests and horseshoe pitchers will have their pits side by side with quoit tossers. Sea scouts will race on the Tidal Basin, while model yachts will sail gracefully over the reflecting pool. Croquet players will tap the wooden sphere through the wickets, while nearby hockey devotees will demonstrate their favorite sport.

This is a small picture of the vast athletic program that will be held by boys and girls up to and through high school age in honor of George Washington. Present plans call for eight baseball games on the Ellipse during the afternoon between private prep and public high schools.

Alongside of the reflecting pool the junior high boys will have a track meet in which probably 300 will take part. It is not planned to name a team champion in this meet, but all of the usual events will be held.

The Y. W. C. A. Girl Reserves will play the finals of their tennis tournament on the Monument courts, and the Department of Playgrounds will open the girls' singles tournament. Sixteen of the leading players from the junior and senior boys' playground tournaments of last year will be put through a tournament during the afternoon.

Among the organizations to have

Tardugno Out Due to Hurt Shoulder

Forced to Forfeit in Final; Marmel Loses on Decision.

Pyne Drops Semfiinal; Infighting Forte of Virginia Star.

Special to The Washington Post.

STATE COLLEGE, Pa., April 9.—Bobby Goldstein, University of Virginia lightweight, and the first Dixie battler to wear a national collegiate boxing crown, defeated Bob Taylor, Pacific Coast champion, in the championship round of the Olympic tryouts here tonight.

Eddie Marmel, Columbus University, lost on a decision to Dave Stoop, Penn State, in the bantamweight class.

Mike Tardugno, Columbus, 126 pounder, was forced to forfeit, because of injury, to Werthiemer, of Syracuse.

A strained shoulder, suffered this afternoon, cost Tardugno his chance to fight Syracuse's Eastern intercollegiate champion.

Scoring two knockdowns over his West Coast opponent, Goldstein easily won the judges' decision to gain the championship. The Virginia boxer used a right uppercut to advantage and carried away the last two rounds without any trouble. Taylor was slowed up by being forced to guard a badly injured ear carefully throughout the fight.

Infighting Forte Of Goldstein.

Goldstein's effective work in the opening round came in his clever infighting. He landed hard body blows which weakened Taylor considerably. Goldstein reached the finale by defeating Ferrero, Penn State, this afternoon.

In the 118-pound bout, Stoop hit Marmel continually with a left jab, knocking him down twice in the second round and holding the advantage in the last.

Danny Pyne, Catholic University, 160-pounder, lost a close decision in the semifinals to Dynamite Joe Moran, Syracuse. Both men were groggy at the bell after putting up a terrific slugging exhibition. In the heavyweight class, Felton Gentry, Virginia, dropped a decision to Remus, Army, by a narrow margin.

Goldstein, twice featherweight champion of the Southern Conference, representing the University of Virginia, reached the final round of the lightweight division by easily outpointing Paul Ferrero, of Penn State. A left hook to the jaw floored Ferrero for nine in the second round and he took a tidy lacing the rest of the way.

Tardugno, hailed as the roughest, toughest young man in the featherweight division, punched out a decision over John Minardi, of Florida University, twice Southern Conference titleholder, in three rounds, to gain the finals. Tardugno boxed beautifully when not tearing into the Southerner with a two-fisted attack.

Marmel Scores Easy Win.

Marmel, who gained the semifinals without donning a glove due to the scarcity of entrants in the bantamweight division, scored handily over John H. Houchens, of Loyola College of Baltimore. There was never any doubt as to the winner.

The Associated Press summaries follow:

ZANE GREY RECORD FALLS.

Auckland, New Zealand (A.P.).—The record catch of a 450-pound striped marlin, held by Zane Grey, American novelist, was far surpassed this season when J. Mowlem pulled an 820-pound specimen from the Bay of Plenty. Mowlem, president of the Tauranga Deep Sea Fishing Club, and other sportsmen have found the swordfish plentiful.

TOWEE, NEVER HEADED, WINS IN BOWIE MEMORIAL SPRINT

15,000 Watch Bowie Stake In Rain

Curtis Sees Sagamore Colt Beat Neglected by 3 Lengths.

Dornach, Foul Tip Win First 2 Races for Mrs. Whitney.

By WALTER HAIGHT.

A COURAGEOUS pair, making their respective livings on the Nation's race tracks, teamed to win the Rowe Memorial Handicap yesterday in the mud and rain at Bowie. This combination of horse and boy was Towee, son of Harpenden and Blue Grass Belle, and Jockey Johnny Bejshak. The Sagamore Stable is $3,480 richer as the result of their combined efforts. Portam, son of The Porter, was second, some three lengths behind the winner, with Last Date, of the Audley Farm entry, third, and Air Pilot, the Mereworth Stud hope, fourth.

There was a noticeable ripple of applause in the stands as the field went to the post. It was for Johnny Bejshak, the boy who rolled over the fence with Wise Kid the other day. Few expected the rider to return so soon after his injury, but the public showed its confidence in the boy's nerve by backing Towee down to 4 to 1.

And there was little to the race but Towee and Bejshak. The little brown colt jumped out in front from his post on the outside. Bejshak evidently knew his mount, for he rushed Towee along accompanied by Last Date and Portam with Mexico fourth.

Towee Takes Long Lead.

As the field went around the stretch turn Towee and Bejshak put some five lengths of misty daylight between them and Last Date, which had replaced Portam as the pace follower. Porteus, with the gentleman jockey, "Pete" Bostwick, up, moved up menacingly at this point, but soon dropped back.

Bejshak eased Towee up nearing the finish, and Portam, under the ancient McTaggart, found new life to come again and beat out Last Date for third money.

Admiral Grayson presented the silver trophy that went with the victory to J. H. (Bud) Stotler.

The crowd came in numbers of 15,000, and despite more rain than Sadie Thompson saw on the Isle of Pago Pago, gathered at the stretch fence to root their choices home.

Vice President Charles Curtis was in the clubhouse, an ardent race fan.

Dornoch Shows Class.

Dornoch, Mrs. John Hay Whitney's 3-year-old gelding, made a show of his field in winning the first race from eleven other maidens. Burnside, from the J. J. Moran string, was second, ahead of Huraway. Albert Robertson rode the winner, and the time of 1:13 2-5 was fast under the conditions.

Robertson evidently had a horror of the mud. He hustled Dornoch into a long lead and was never threatened, winning by eight lengths. Robertson finished the ride wetter, but without the mud coating that his less fortunate fellow riders picked up on the 6-furlong trip.

Mrs. John Hay Whitney scored a double when Foul Tip defeated the 2-year-olds in the second race. This little dark gray filly led Cattail, of the Ziegler-Middleburg entry, to the wire with Miss Brilliant third. Jockey Hanford had the mount on the winner.

Help Me broke on top closely followed by Foul Tip. The latter sprinted her way to the front midway of the stretch turn and Cattail moved up to trail the Whitney miss by a length at the finish. Miss Brilliant came from back in the field to take third.

Tred Avon Wins Easily.

S. W. Labrot's Tred Avon, making her 1932 debut, won easily over a field of six others trying for the White Marsh Purse. Vaccilate was second and Lord Tournament third. Tred Avon won by five lengths eased up and ran the 5½ furlongs in 1:07 2-5.

Lord Tournament, as is his habit, did the majority of the early running. Hank Mills took the colt some six lengths in front but Tred Avon and Vacillate passed the tiring Trueman entry when straightened out in the stretch. Tred Avon then drew away and Burke was looking back over his shoulder at the finish. Lord Tournament's attempt to steal the race found him third ahead of Jaz Age.

The victory was particularly sweet to the Labrot interests, which were disappointed last Friday when owners of Maryland-foaled horses scratched to a number that forced Racing Secretary McLennan to throw out the feature.

Royal Ruffian Gets Nose Decision.

The Old Dominion Purse drew a field of eight, and Royal Ruffian, owned by Jouette Shouse, of the Democratic national committee, was returned the winner in a driving finish with Mrs. John Hay Whitney's colt, Bounding Deep. Impish, from the Wheatly Stable, was third. Royal Ruffian paid $11.80 in the mutuels.

Robertson, on Bounding Deep, rushed his mount to the front and swung into the rail as the field passed the clubhouse. Royal Ruffian was laying second, with Open Hearth, the favorite, third. Bounding Deep failed to quit, as many expected, and Hanford was forced to ride Royal Ruffian out to take the decision by the narrowest of margins. The late rush of Open Hearth failed to materialize.

Star Lassie, benefited by the expert handling of Sonny Workman, defeated Tinita in the sixth race for platers. Keith, with Robertson up, lasted to take third money after setting a fast pace.

Garlic won the seventh race, defeating Gully Jumper for the claiming purse. Essare, the old timer, was third.

BOAT FIVE PLAYS TOMORROW

The Potomac Boat Club basket ball team, made up largely of members of the champion Eastern High outfit, will play the Arundel Boat Club, of Baltimore, tomorrow night at George Washington University Gymnasium. The gymnasium will be open to the public, and it probably will mark the ending of the court season.

Turf Trophy Is Presented

Admiral Cary T. Grayson presented the Rowe Memorial Handicap Trophy to J. H. Stoler, trainer of Towee, yesterday following the colt's victory in the Bowie feature. The group (left to right), Admiral Cary T. Grayson, Joseph Boyle, general manager of the Bowie track; James Rowe 3d, Jockey J. Bejshak, who rode Towee to victory and J. H. Stotler, trainer of the Sagamore Stable.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—DORNOCH, $5.30, $3.30, $2.60; BURNSIDE, $3.80, $3.00; HURAWAY, $5.40

DORNOCH outbroke his field, sprinted into a long lead at once, and held sway for the entire trip. BURNSIDE, in nearest pursuit of the winner from the start, was unable to offer much contention after the first half mile. HURAWAY improved his position on the outside and, closing gamely, was easily best of the others. SINGLE KAY broke slowly, worked his way up on the inside, but was unable to threaten the leaders. ROKEBY was held safe throughout. SUNEUR weakened in the final drive. MAJOR LEE quit. KNIGHT CLUB was eased up when he began to sprawl.

SECOND RACE—Four furlongs. Purse, $1,200. The Glyndon. For 2-year-olds. Allowances. Start good from gates. Won driving; place, same. Went to post at 2:33. Off at 2:36½. Winner, Mrs. J. H. Whitney's gr. f. (2), by Coggaulois—Sobrange. Trained by J. W. Healy. Value to winner, $850; second, $200; third, $100; fourth, $50. Time, 0:23 3-5, 0:49.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—FOUL TIP, $6.70, $3.70, $2.70; CATTAIL (W. Ziegler, jr. and Middleburg Stable Entry), $7.10, $3.90; MISS BRILLIANT, $3.20.

FOUL TIP, away in the first flight, shook HELP ME off after the opening furlong, was kept under severe urging and had enough left to withstand CATTAIL. Latter, a stout factor from the start, closed with good courage for the final drive. MISS BRILLIANT, forced to race on the outside for racing room, closed gamely through the final quarter-mile. BRIGHT PATTERN could never improve her position. HELP ME weakened when forced to stay in the deeper footing next the inner rail.

THIRD RACE—Five and one-half furlongs. Purse, $1,400. The White Marsh. For 3-year-olds and upward. Allowances. Start good from gates. Won easily. Place, driving. Went to post at 3:07. Off at 3:12. Winner, S. W. Labrot's br. or gr. f. (4), by Sir Greystel—La Murson. Trained by W. Irvine. Value to winner, $1,000; second, $225; third, $125; fourth, $50. Time, 0:23 2-5, 0:48 3-5, 1:07 2-5.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—TRED AVON, $6.70, $4.20, $3.50; VACILLATE, $3.90, $2.80; LORD TOURNAMENT, $3.70.

TRED AVON, kept under stout urging in the early stages, came around VACILLATE when entering the home stretch and, taking command in the final furlong, drew out steadily thereafter. VACILLATE forced a fast pace in the first half mile, took a brief lead when LORD TOURNAMENT bolted, but was unable to stay with the winner in the closing drive. LORD TOURNAMENT displayed high early speed, but bore out badly when approaching the home stretch and lost much ground.

FOURTH RACE—One mile and seventy yards. Purse, $1,400. The Old Dominion. For 3-year-olds and upward. Allowances. Start good from gates. Won driving; place, same. Went to post at 3:39. Off at 3:43½. Winner, J. Shouse's br. g. (4), by Coventry—Pleasing. Trained by M. Lowenstein. Value to winner, $1,000; second, $225; third, $125; fourth, $50. Time, 0:24, 0:48 3-5, 1:14, 1:40 2-5, 1:45 1-5.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—ROYAL RUFFIN, $11.80, $7.00, $5.30; BOUNDLESS DEEP, $12.10, $6.90; IMPISH, $4.90.

ROYAL RUFFIN, showing great improvement in form, raced close to BOUNDLESS DEEP while under steadying restraint, gained stoutly and moving on equal terms with the pacemaker in the final furlong, withstood a stout drive to get up in the concluding strides. BOUNDLESS DEEP, hurried to the front, was rated along until challenged and fought it out desperately in the closing drive. IMPISH, steered wide for the entire trip, was held safe when put to a drive. PROSE AND POETRY weakened after six furlongs. OPEN HEARTH went into the air at the break, was kept in the deepest footing throughout, and was done after six furlongs.

FIFTH RACE—Six furlongs. Purse, $5,000 added. The Rowe Memorial Handicap. For 3-year-olds. Start good from gates for all but Arrow. Won easily; place, driving. Went to post at 4:15. Off at 4:21. Two-dollar mutuels paid—TOWEE, $9.90, $5.70, $3.90; PORTAM, $28.40, $13.40; LATE DATE (Audley Farm Entry), $3.40.

TOWEE, quick to get going and displaying good speed in the footing, opened up a safe lead when approaching the home stretch and held PORTAM safe thereafter. Latter, following in closest attendance of the winner, was unable to menace TOWEE in the late stages. LATE DATE was hard ridden the entire trip and was best of the others. AIR PILOT lacked early speed and could never reach a forward position. SNOBFUL, slow to get going, was kept on the inside and closed gamely.

SIXTH RACE—One and one-eighth miles. Purse, $1,200. Claiming. For 4-year-olds and upward. Start good from gates. Won easily; place, driving. Went to post at 4:50. Off at 4:53. Winner, D. Two-dollar mutuels paid—STAR LASSIE, $8.70, $5.90, $4.80; TINITA, $12.90, $8.60; KEITH, $8.90.

STAR LASSIE, sent into early contention, was steadied along until leaving the back stretch, came through on the inside of KEITH to assume command and kept under urging was gradually drawing clear. TINITA worked her way into contention stoutly and, saving ground in the final stages, outfinished KEITH. Latter displayed good early speed while setting the pace, but weakened when the real issue came. JUDGE CAVERLY showed a good effort. DANGEROUS, far back for six furlongs, closed strong. WRACKELL was used up in the early racing.

SEVENTH RACE—One and one-eighth miles. Purse, $1,200. Claiming. For 4-year-olds and upward. Start good for all but Eager Play from gates. Won easily; place, driving. Went to post at 5:27. Off at 5:34. Winner, R. B. Allen's b. c. (4), by Port Au Feu—Wisteria. Trained by R. B. Allen. Value to winner, $850; second, $200; third, $100; fourth, $50. GARLIC, following ROAN ANTELOPE closely, disposed of the latter when ready, saved ground all the way and had speed in reserve at the finish. GULLY JUMPER, closer up than usual, responded to punishment after dropping back, and outfinished the tiring ESSARE. Latter, well placed early, made a stout effort when leaving the backstretch, but was not good enough. ROAN ANTELOPE began tiring after six furlongs. MONOCLE, closed with good energy in the final half-mile.

A. A. U. TITLE MAT BOUTS TOMORROW

35 Seek D. C. Honors at Boys Club; Finals Wednesday.

PURE and unadulterated rassling, without the fanfare of leers, growls, snorts, dives in and out of rings, airplane spins and flying mares, will be on tap tomorrow and Wednesday at the Boys Club when the accredited young men of Washington who bend bones without view of money recompense tangle for the District A. A. U. championships.

Thirty-five youths, ranging from 115-pound boys up to and including the amateur prototypes of Roebuck and Pinetzki, are entered. This is something of a disappointment, since amateur rassling has spread to all parts of the city and an unofficial consensus shows about 200 actively interested in the game at the Y. M. C. A., J. C. C., Gallaudet and the Boys Club.

Most of the 1931 champions will be defending their titles. Among the aces entered are Dell Shockley, 112-pound expert from Oklahoma A. & M.; S. M. Wisocker and Jack Broaddus, crack Y. M. C. A. 145-pounder; Mike Scanlon, St. John's athlete, and Smith W. Brookhart, jr., 16-year-old 215-pound son of the senator from Iowa.

Amateur-Pro Wrestling Different.

Sharp differences lie between amateur and professional rassling. Body flips that are conventional in pro matches are rarely, if ever, seen in amateur ranks. Szabo's back body drop is never used, amateurs claiming that no advantage can be gained from it. Dusek's elbow jolts are out of the question. Stein's flying tackles are barred, as are the left hooks of White Feather. Amateurs claim that most of the sensational throws the pros secured are insincere, since they can only be gained through cooperation with the opponent.

There is a method of counting points in amateur rassling. You get 5 for downing a man, and he gets 3 if he gets up. Consequently there is no such thing as inactivity in the ring. "Bicycling" away from an opponent—a customary procedure in professional grappling—causes the cyclist to have a prohibitive number of points scored against him.

Admission is 25 cents.

The entries follow:

115 pounds and under—Frank Anderson (Y. M. C. A.), Raymond Huyck (Boys Club), Sidney Gordon (Boys Club), Billy Vermillion (Boys Club), Dell G. Shockley (Y. M. C. A.), Lewis Malitz (Boys Club).

Fawsett Shows Way At Gun Club Traps

A driving rain failed to dampen the ardor of mainstays of the Washington Gun Club yesterday. C. C. Fawsett, District champion, was high with a mark of 47 out of 50, followed by Julius Marcey, with 42.

The 100-target program was dispensed with. Next week the traps will be closed, since most of the members will either compete or be present at a Baltimore-Washington match in Baltimore.

Yesterday's results:

C. C. Fawsett, 47; Julius Marcey, 42; A. W. Strowger, 41; L. L. Lane, 40; R. D. Morgan, 40; W. S. Wilson, 39; R. P. Livesey, 38; Dr. A. V. Parsons, 37; N. L. Simmone, jr., 36; T. C. Pearce, 22x25.

Boxing Bits Hereabouts

By JACK ESPEY

WASHINGTON fistic fans will continue to find plenty of entertainment after the close of the indoor season in Alexandria, if present plans of the Fort Washington Athletic Association and the arena formerly known as Mid-City, near Laurel, materialize.

Fort Washington, with Frankie Mann at the helm, plans to stage its first show in June. The Laurel plant, which will be known as Twin-City, will begin operations about the middle of May with C. E. "Fats" Cornell acting as promoter and matchmaker.

It is expected that Fort Washington again will sponsor the type of show conducted so successfully last year. One half of the talent in a Fort show must be enlisted in the Army or Reserve Corps. These doughboy clouters have a way of putting on rousing exhibitions. The other half represents the strictly professional cauliflower market.

Twin-City will draw on talent from Washington, Baltimore, Philadelphia and other Eastern cities. If the venture is a success Cornell will bring in several major leaguers. He hopes to stage a Reds Barry-Maxie Rosenbloom bout as his opening feature.

Cornell for several weeks has had workmen reparing the damage done to his arena by the wintry weather. The huge parking space, which last year was nothing more than a vast mudhole, has been given a thick coating of cinders.

Nate (Newlywed) Brown will meet Reds Barry in the Day Nursery feature bout April 26. Nate drew with Reds a couple of months ago and says he will win this one. But the smiling Hebrew may be surprised. Barry never looked better than he did against Marty Gallagher last Tuesday.

More significant than Barry's improvement is the fact that he is taking the Brown match at the risk of losing a shot at Maxie Rosenbloom, world's light-heavyweight champion. If Brown wins again, Barry's attractiveness as an opponent for Rosenbloom at Twin-City Arena surely would suffer.

Evidently Barry, and his wise manager, Patsy Donovan, believe that Brown is not so tough.

The Day Nursery originally planned to stage the Brown-Barry scrap on April 19. Billy McCarney, however, signed for Brown to appear that night in Cleveland. So the Nursery now seeks to bring back Bob Godwin, Southern light-heavyweight champion, with Cowboy Phelps, rising young Arizona 175-pounder, for the nineteenth.

Phelps polished off Sammy Weiss the other night in Norfolk. He spotted Sammy about 20 pounds and beat him all the way in ten rounds. Strangely enough, both Godwin and Phelps are highly rated as light-heavyweights although they always enter the ring weighing 10 or 15 pounds under the limit.

Roddy Davis, Eastern High lightweight, established himself solidly in the forefront of Portner preliminary boys with his neat trimming of George Esrick last week. Davis is the most improved young boxer in town. He has been training under Harry "Kid" Groves.

JABS, HOOKS AND CROSSES—Billy Schwartz's retirement was short, indeed. Less than two weeks after announcing it, Billy is back in training, his next engagement being slated for April 19. * * * Schwartz probably will box Bill Feamster, heavyweight champion of the Carolinas and conqueror of Jack Denning and Buster Newberry. * * * Billy Strickler, whom a lot of the light heavies are sidestepping (Schwartz included) because he is a southpaw, has difficulty getting sparring partners. Squared off with Nate Brown the other day at Mann's Gym, but Nate took one look, dropped his arms and said, "Nothing doing; I never did like left-handers." Strickler is beginning to regret his win over Al Treanor, of Philly, who, incidentally, defeated Jack McVey Friday night. * * * Sid Marks, English Jew, weighing 210, challenges from Baltimore, as does Harry Messick, light-heavy, who wants Schwartz. * * * Billy Edwards, dusky local middleweight and the best available sparring partner for Barry, Gallagher and other big boys, departs soon for Vermont and a series of real bouts. * * * Gabe Navos, Nick Antonelli and K. O. Riley have deserted the Mohawk hospital crew. * * * When will Henry Irving learn that training is part of the ring game?

18 CONTESTS FOR SCHOOL ATHLETES

Eastern - Western in Series Feature on Tuesday.

EIGHTEEN scholastic athletic events, embracing three sports and including the first appearance of the champion Eastern High School team in the high school baseball series, dot the local sports calendar for the ensuing six days.

Baseball makes up the greater portion of the week, of course, but some interest may be shared with the annual Central interclass track meet Wednesday and the opening of the Prep School Tennis League Friday.

Eastern's ball team, undefeated and untouched for four full years of high school series competition, sets out on a rough road Tuesday when Western is met in the first of a group of games which might well see the tremendously long winning streak of the Easterners cracked.

Pitcher Payne Western's Main Hope.

Western doubtless will not be the club to break the winning ways of the champions. Western's chief hope is its pitcher, Long Bill Payne, but the team itself does not offer much in the way of either fielding or hitting. Eastern starts out with a good fielding club, but one that is not particularly strong at bat. It has two outstanding pitchers in Dick Lanahan and Francis Cleary and is generally a favorite to make it five pennants in a row, but the team will be called upon to defeat better teams than in the last four years.

POJELLO AND M'GILL IN FEATURE

Cordovano on Card at Bolling Field Tomorrow.

SOME of Paul Bowser's very best talent will go to bat at 8:30 o'clock tomorrow night at Bolling Field under the auspices of the field's athletic association. Chief of the headliners is Karl Pojello, lithe Lithuanian, who is one of the best in the business. He will meet a seasoned foe in Pat McGill.

Two belligerent matmen meet in the second feature, when Bull Martin and Rudy Laditzi, famed for their wild and woolly tactics, collide.

Backing up the topliners will be ace-high supplementaries in which Sam Cordovano, former Georgetown University gridman, shoots his flying tackle at Joe Massimo, in which Danny Winters opposes Bull Garnon, and the fifth bout, which brings together John Siejack and Fred Locke.

While Pojello is capable of holding his own on any rassling card as a feature attraction, it is not unlikely that the brawl between Martin and Laditzi will leave the most exciting impression upon the spectators.

Martin was the first rassler who ever appeared here who introduced such mat tactics as left hooks and rabbit punches. He was the original Rudy Dusek, of Washington, and his fame still lingers in the mind of the older rassling supporters. Laditzi is about as rough.

Pojello has many champions among those who like wrestling, rather than rassling. He is one of the smoothest of all the matmen. He has the best flying wristlock in the game and wins generally on an airplane spin.

The usual bus service will be afforded street car patrons free of charge from the car line at Howard road and Nichols avenue. Because of the expense of the card ladies will be assessed half price.

SOMERVILLE HORSE WINS HUNT CUP

Racketeer II Defeats Primero in Curles Neck Feature.

CURLES NECK, Va., April 9 (A.P.).—Mrs. T. M. Somerville's Racketeer II today outraced a classy field over muddy turf to win the Deep Run Hunt Cup.

Rasketeer duelled with the favored Primero over the first six jumps, but went in front at the seventh and maintained the gruelling pace into the home stretch. Primero, last year's winner, made a game effort to win, but was badly outdistanced at the finish.

Buddy Clarke raced under restraint for the first mile and a half, but hustled to the front in the last three-quarters and passed Mob Law four jumps from home, to place third. Light Hampton was among the leaders at the half-mark, but lacked the staying qualities needed to figure at the finish.

The seven races, including the split field in the Malvern Hill Steeplechase, were featured by the successes of Mrs. Somerville, whose Fresh Blue, Old Rose and Silver Sashes were carried to victory in the Ruddock Plate's 5½-furlong sprint on the flat, in addition to the win in the cup race.

Chatter Anne broke on top in the field of seven starters and stood off the stretch challenge made by Aires to win.

Some 2,500 spectators braved the showers to witness the races.

10 CONTESTS ON COLLEGE PROGRAM

G. U.-Mt. St. Mary's Ball Game Feature of Lean Week.

HAVING broken a long spell of inactivity late last week, local collegiate athletes continue competition this week when ten games in five sports will be played on home and foreign fields. Georgetown, George Washington and Maryland figure in the program.

Of the five contests slated for home consumption, Georgetown's baseball clash with Mount St. Mary's College on Tuesday features the list. The Hilltop and Emmitsburg nines always wage interesting battle on the diamond and this year should prove no exception inasmuch as both clubs appear about evenly matched. Mount St. Mary's was the winner last year.

Maryland's tossers also appear at home, meeting Dickinson College on Saturday at College Park. Tomorrow and Tuesday the Old Line Club performs in Lexington, Va., playing, respectively, V. M. I. and Washington and Lee.

Georgetown's tennis team captained by Dooly Mitchell, one of Washington's leading netmen, makes its debut on the new Hilltop courts on Friday with Washington and Lee furnishing the opposition.

The George Washington racqueters also start operations this week but go to Baltimore to do so. They will engage Johns Hopkins on Wednesday. The Colonial golf team, beaten in its first match by Boston College on April 1, returns to action on Wednesday against William and Mary.

Of special interest to Maryland's followers will be the two-game invasion to be made by the Old Line lacrosse team in Georgia on Friday and Saturday. This is the first time Maryland has listed opposition so far South. Georgia Tech will be met first, followed by Georgia.

NEW TALENT ON PORTNER PROGRAM

Overlin, Navy Pride, to Face Formidable Foe Tuesday.

FOUR highly touted boxers new to these parts will show their ring wares Tuesday night in the Alexandria Day Nursery's benefit show in Portner's Arena. The card consists of three eight-round bouts and a pair of fours.

Probably the best of the new talent is Ken Overlin, hard-punching sailor from the U. S. S. Idaho, now stationed at Norfolk. Overlin will trade wallops with Tony D'Alessandro, middleweight champion of Long Island, another who will be making his initial appearance in the Alexandria house of clout.

On his record, Overlin should beat D'Alessandro, although the latter is reported to have won eighteen professional bouts after having mopped up in the amateur world. The sailor lad recently gave Eric Lawson a terrific beating, this same Lawson having previously defeated Billy Schwartz, Billy Strickler and Vince Forgione, all capable fighters. Besides Lawson, Overlin has decisively defeated such boys as Walter Kirkwood, Bob Turner and Joey Raymond.

D'Alessandro Has Fine Record.

D'Alessandro is a stablemate of Louie Jallos, young Cleveland Greek, who is to engage Jack Portney, clever Baltimore lightweight, in one of the featured eight-rounders. The Italian has kayoed nine of his professional victims, a fact indicating he will stage a slugging match with the murderous hitting Overlin.

The other newcomers are Buddy Grimes and Sailor Potter, both of Norfolk. Grimes, a featherweight, who is to meet Harry Groves, of Baltimore, in four rounds, is credited with two victories over Pete Powell, speedy Newport News bantamweight, who recently outpointed Gabe Navos at Alexandria. Sailor Potter has won six of his seven professional bouts and will oppose an undefeated youngster in Young Van, middleweight, of this city.

Tootsie Bashara and Bobby Burns, both Portner favorites, will clash in the other bout. Bashara upset Jimmy "Sailor" McKenna with an explosive right hand to the beard not long ago, while Burns fought two slashing duels with Jallos, in which he won and lost.

Time Service to Give Baseball Late News

Standard Time Service, the locally supported institution which will tell you the correct time, wake you up in the morning, call you to remind you of bridge dates and other niceties commonly associated with a valet, will extend its service to baseball this year.

The progress of the game, the final score, the batteries, winning pitcher and other baseball topics will be dispensed. This service will extend to both major leagues.

A. A. U. Handball Title Captured by Walker

Channing Walker, runner-up to the title last year, yesterday won the District A. A. U. handball championship, beating J. B. Payne, 21-14 and 21-9. Both players entered from the Y. M. C. A.

Walker was the winner from the start, showing a versatile all-around game and never slackening his pace. Last year he was runner-up to Jack Schwartz, of the Jewish Community Center, who did not compete this year.

The final round of the doubles will be played tomorrow at noon. It will bring together the team of J. B. Payne and Paul Pearlman against Randy Myers and Tom Charshee.

MAJOR LEAGUE CHIEFS FORESEE TIGHTER PENNANT RACES

Macks Facing Fight, Says Harridge

A. L. Head Sees Nats and Yankees as Stronger Rivals.

Heydler Views Race in National Carrying Added Interest.

By WILL HARRIDGE
(President the American League).

CHICAGO, April 9 (A.P.).—The American League should have the tightest race this year since 1926 when the Yankees beat out the Cleveland Indians by two games.

Tradition points to a new champion as no team has been able to win the American League flag four straight years, a goal which Connie Mack has set for his strengthened Philadelphia Athletics. However, you can be assured that the A's will be a hard team to beat, tradition or no tradition.

Connie Mack, who I feel sure is sincere in saying that the A's have two or three clubs to worry about this year, has strengthened his reserves considerably. The Yankees, picked as the most dangerous team in the race, have improved both pitching and defense, while Washington has added power to its attack. Cleveland, weak in fielding and pitching in 1931, appears to have strengthened both these departments.

St. Louis will start with virtually the same team that finished last season, but the management is confident of finishing as high or higher than a year ago. The Chicago White Sox and Boston Red Sox have shown more improvement possibly than any other teams in the league with the exception of New York. Despite a rather unsatisfactory training trip, Detroit has made great efforts to strengthen its team and looks stronger.

We should have a good season and a good race, and, I hope, the next world's champion.

By JOHN A. HEYDLER
(President National League).

New York, April 9 (A.P.).—Whatever else may be temporarily out of gear in our national life, I believe I am safe in saying there is no slowing up in baseball interest. Reports which come in to me from all over the country indicate more boys are already out on the lots playing the game than ever before and that the off-season trades have stimulated an enormous amount of interest in the coming season.

Our players should toe the mark next Tuesday in excellent physical condition. Fortunately, injuries and illness are not so pronounced as in recent years.

To me there are several reasons why the National League's fifty-seventh season promises unusual interest:

Among them, the restoration to sound limb of great players like Lindstrom, Wright, Critz and Haines, as well as the newcomer Heath.

The comebacks of Hack Wilson, Waite Hoyt and Art Shires.

The switch of many well-known players to other "home" towns.

The addition of a number of promising youngsters, who have made impressive showing in training games.

The test of leadership qualities of two new managers, Max Carey and George Gibson, both stars in their playing days.

The keen interest in what "Pepper" Martin will do over the 154-game route, and in the question of how long "Rabbit" Maranville will keep up his sterling play.

The rear guard of last year—Cincinnati, Philadelphia, Boston and Pittsburgh—are unquestionably improved clubs. Brooklyn, with a practically new line-up, has promise. The powerful and well-managed New York and Chicago Clubs will be in the fight; so that our new world champion Cardinals, with all their reserve strength, will be facing more determined and sustained competition.

Capital Field Trials To Be Held Thursday

The eleventh annual spring field trial of the National Capital Field Trial Club will be held Thursday at Halpine, Md., near the Congressional Airport. Entries are expected to be large, since there is reported to be a preponderance o fquail in the region,

Two stakes will be run, one for novice all age dogs and the other for puppies under fifteen months. Judging will be done by Harry B. Mitchell and Claude B. Stickley.

BUSICK KEPT BUSY.

Jim Busick, of Maryland, doesn't really know whether he is a track man or tennis player. When the varsity track and net teams are home on the same day he high jumps, pole vaults and plays No. 2 in singles for the racketers, and also figures in the doubles.

There are no conflicts in the schedules this year, but Busick will be in action often from now until May 25, as there are six more dual meets and 10 more tennis matches carded for the Old Liners.

OLD LINERS VERSATILE.

Seven men who are out for varsity spring sports at Maryland are capable performers in three pastimes.

Bozey Berger, Shorty Chalmers, and Bucky Buscher now are members of the nine, and Jack Norris, Rufus Vincent, Charlie May, and Bob Snyder are playing lacrosse. All figured in football and basket ball during the 1931-32 campaign, some of them very conspicuously.

BIRDS PLENTIFUL.

Fifty-two coveys of birds were found in one day during the Southern amateur field trials at Albany, Ga., this year.

WALTER PERRY JOHNSON.

THE gangling Idaho youth of 25 years ago who walked into the Washington Park one day in August, 1907, and astounded baseballdom with the tremendous speed in his pitching arm, tomorrow will lead the Nats into the American League Pennant race, marking his fourth consecutive year as manager of the Washington Club.

Twenty-one years of pitching service with the Washington teams saw Walter Johnson retire from the mound the holder of twelve records as follows:

Most years pitched—21.
Most games pitched—802.
Most consecutive complete games pitched—3.
Most years leading earned run average—6.
Most games won—416.
Most consecutive games won—16.
Most games won in three consecutive years—96.
Most consecutive shutout innings—56.
Most years leading league in strikeouts—12.
Most consecutive strikeouts—6.
Most consecutive strikeouts in inning—4 (tie).
Most games won from one club in season—10.

His pitching career tragically ended when he was hit by a line drive from the bat of Joe Judge in spring training in 1927, breaking his leg, Johnson retired from the pitching mound and managed the Newark Club in 1928. The following year he was tendered the post as manager of the Nats. His club finished fifth in 1929, second in 1930, third in 1931. This year he faces the season with the most powerful team during his tenure of the managerial post.

DIAMOND DUST FROM THE SANDLOTS

BROOKE GRUBB relates an amusing incident which occurred during a game the Howitzer Giants were playing at Huntington, Md., last year. It seems that the home team had a man on first in the latter stages of the game, which was very close. He made a break for second and to all appearances was an easy mark for a put-out. Instead of sliding into the bag, however, the runner evaded the baseman by going out of the base line. Of course that stirred up the patriotism of old "Marse" Grubb and he dashed over to the "ump," claiming that the runner was out.

"Out?. How do you figure he's out?" queried the arbiter—one of the home-grown variety.

"Didn't he go out of the base line?" returned Grubb.

"I don't see no base line," retorted the umpire.

"Listen, there's an imaginary line drawn between the bases and he went outside of it."

"Well, if the line is imaginary, I imagine he didn't," came back the officiator. And that settled the matter.

"Bottle" Cox has been assigned to aid Umpire Roy Van Graflin in "working" the Washington-Buffalo game, which will be played at Griffith Stadium this afternoon. "Bottle" will call them on the bases.

Joe Sweeney skipped off to Rockville last week and joined the ranks of the benedicts. His bride was Evelyn Vazquez.

Speaking of Sweeney, some one patted him on the back after one of the St. Mary's Celtics' victories over the Apaches last fall and said, "Nice game, Joe." Joe looked at him and replied, "Who couldn't gain with two all-Americans opening up holes big enough for a wagon to go through?" He referred to Leo Raskowski, Ohio State, and Joe Kreski, Wisconsin.

"Pepco" Barry has signed with the Clarksburg Club of the Middle Atlantic League for the 1932 season. He is scheduled to report the twentieth of this month.

Walter Morris is at Harrisburg, Pa., striving for a berth on that team.

"Buck" Greer's two youngsters, Ralph, aged 16, and Billy, 13, are dyed-in-the-wool ring fans. Haven't missed a bout in this vicinity in the last year and a half. The two of them have rigged up a ring in the cellar of their home and started an athletic club. Last week two lads in the neighborhood came to the club, boasting of their leather-pushing ability. They were permitted to give an exhibition of their skill, using the Greer boys for sparring partners. The newcomers emerged from the fray, sad to relate, looking slightly different from the way in which they entered. It took "Buck" several days to convince the irate parents that it was all really, good, clean fun, but the club lost two prospective members.

Jim Hayre and Bill Bresnahan, who will direct the Goodacre White Coffee Pot Midgets, have rounded up a likely looking bunch of boys for their team. Included on the roster are Darmsted, Bieber, Couzzo, Bresnahan, Dean, Wahler, Miller, Boyd, Crisafull, Burrows, Divers, Hollidge, Farame, Brosnan, Pepper, Bryan, Stein and Dugan. The team set the city championship as its goal.

The Hawk Midgets are seeking more players. Call Lincoln 8307-J after 12 o'clock noon.

BIG LEAGUES AWAITING OPENERS

Thrilling Races Hope of Baseball for Good Season.

Toward this end, the majority of teams have been radically overhauled, especially in the National League. Brooklyn and Cincinnati will present line-ups altered from top to bottom. The Yankees, the Cubs the Braves and the White Sox likewise have achieved radical shake-ups, all calculated to improve their chances of going somewhere and entertaining the customers.

Mack Stands Pat On Line-up.

Alone of the clubs figured seriously in the title hunts, Connie Mack's Athletics stand pat on the line-up that dropped the world series honors last October after carrying off the American League championship for the third straight year. Mack, however, has fortified himself with youthful reserves, for emergencies, and relies on the big punch to back up his redoubtable pitching trio of Grove, Earnshaw and Walberg.

The experts are not quite so hopeful as the magnates in respect to the pennant outlook. The big majority, making their verdict public through the Associated Press poll, regard the Cardinals and Athletics as strong favorites to repeat, with the New York Giants and Yankees the only really serious contenders. Optimism is strong, nevertheless, in the camps of such first-division outfits as the Cubs and Washington Senators.

Even though they rule the baseball world for the time being, it is a bit mystifying to find the Cardinals so strongly supported. The St. Louis outfit, besides trading Burleigh Grimes to the Cubs, will start the campaign without the services of the holdout National League hitting champion, Chick Hafey, and with question marks on the ability of two pitching rookies, Tex Carlton and Dizzy Dean.

Whether or not they keep their place at the top, the Cardinals will be one of the most colorful attractions, with chain-store rookies put to the big test and the exploits of Pepper Martin, hero of the world series, in the spotlight.

Martin Has Shown Flashy Form.

Martin has shown enough in spring training to warrant the prediction he will have a flashy year.

From the outset, while all the spring dope is being put to the test, unusual interest will attach to the come-back efforts of such players as Hack Wilson and Art Shires, in addition to the debuts of about a dozen well-ballyhooed newcomers.

The Yankees, with Crosetti and Saltzgaver, and the Cubs, with Hack and Herman, will introduce a pair of infield colts of whom much is expected.

Opening line-ups also are expected to find the responsibility of regulars put upon the youthful shoulders of Len Koenecke, in the outfield for the Giants; Harold Anderson, outfielder, and Carey Selph, infielder, of the White Sox; George Davies, Phillies' outfielder; Nolen Richardson, third baseman, and Bill Lawrence, outfielder, of the Tigers; Fritz Knothe, third baseman, of the Braves; Tony Piet, second baseman, of the Pirates, and Joe Morrisey, infielder, of the Reds.

PHILS DOWN MACKS BY 3 TO 2

Winning Run Forced Over Plate in Ninth Frame.

Philadelphia, April 9 (A.P.)—Pitcher Jimmy Deshong, of the Athletics, walked George Davis, of the Phillies, in the ninth inning with the bases loaded and the score tied, and gave the Phils the final game of the city series today, 3 to 2.

The A's won only one game out of the series of five.

With two out in the Phils' half of the ninth, Al Todd singled and Deshong passed Pinchhitters Taitt and Mallow. Deshong failed to get a single strike across to Davis and there was nothing for Todd to do but stroll home with the winning run.

Both managers worked in a number of subs toward the end of the game.

Outfielder Pepper To Cards in Trade

St. Louis, April 9 (A.P.).—Raymond Pepper, star outfielder of the Rochester Club of the International League, has been obtained by the St. Louis Cardinals in exchange for Bob Parham, it was announced by Vice President Branch Rickey here today.

With Pepper on hand, the Cardinals will have an experienced man to hold down left field in case "Ripper" Collins fails to fill the shoes of the holdout, Chick Hafey, Rickey said.

Pepper last season lost the batting championship of the International League to Ike Boon by a fraction of a point, hitting .356.

Altrock and Schacht Cloak Enmity as Show Goes On

Al Schacht (left) and Nick Altrock, baseball's famous comedy pair, who have long since failed to be friendly off the playing fields.

Personal Jealousies Covered by Veil of Comedy.

By SHIRLEY L. POVICH
(Sports Editor of The Post).

CLOAKED in their buffoonery on the ball field, in an act that is baseball's best sideshow, is a cordial and bristling hate so mutual that it has divided the House of Altrock and Schacht against itself and provided the art of pantomime with a modern version of Pagliacci's "Laugh, Clown, Laugh."

You'll see them out there on the ball field tomorrow at the opening game, Nick Altrock and Al Schacht, clowning together for the merriment of the fans, the same old mirth-provoking stunts and some new ones, but you'd never suspect what Altrock thinks of Schacht, and vice versa.

The falling out between the Nats' two funny men occurred more than a year ago, over an inconsequential incident which was not calculated to impair the personal and professional relations of the companion comedians, but it did, and Altrock speaks to Schacht now only in the line of duty, and Schacht speaks to Altrock only when speech is necessary.

Professional Jealousy.

Even before their rift, the Nats' clowns nursed an intense professional jealousy out there on the ball field, but this human failing was submerged in their companionship after their act was over, and good friends they were until one day in Boston, when, with a railroad station as the scene, they had words.

You'll see Nick and Al going through their slow motion boxing match out there on home plate in the last act of their program. It appears to be all in fun, but then is when Altrock and Schacht take most delight in their work. To the initiates in the press box, they're playing for keeps.

According to the act, Schacht holds the upper hand in the pantomime bout for the first few minutes, hitting Altrock with all the punches in the book, including the elbows, and right smartly does he massage the cauliflowered countenance of the venerable Nick. It's all in fun, but it's both nectar and ambrosia to Al who takes the opportunity to insert a few punches not called for on the regular program. And Nick must take it under the guise of comedy.

Knockout Doubly Sweet to Nick.

But before the bout is over, Nick has his innings. The prescription calls for him to win the fight by a knockout, and the manner in which he slaps Schacht to the ground in the grand climax is none too gentle, and, it is suspected with serious intent. Talk about liking your work. Nick and Al love this act.

Nick is the funny man of the pair. Al is the "gag" man. The acts are Schacht's and he has a perfect foil for the execution in the venerable Nick who merely has to look serious to appear funny.

That's the distinction. Nick goes out there on the diamond, acts naturally, and gets a laugh. Schacht isn't funny until he dons his frock coat and top hat. But Schacht is the guy who thinks out the acts, and he'll tell you that putting pantomime across out there on the ball field several hundred feet from the audience is difficult.

Schacht's acts can't lag. They've got to be funny, significantly funny, or they won't be understood so far away from the audience. They are best when they put on their take-offs on famed sports characters. They pantomimed Suzanne Lenglen and Gertrude Ederle with gratifying results, but Jack Dempsey's feats in the ring have always been their best bet. The long count in the Tunny bout provided Nick and Al with much pantomime fodder.

Lately, Schacht has encroached upon Nick's stunts out there on the ball field. He has never acquired the adeptness of Altrock with a first baseman's glove, but recently Schacht has learned to pull some comedy stunts out on third base that has earned him the full scorn of Nick.

The rift in their personal relations, however, has not affected their popularity throughout the circuit. Like good Thespians, the show must go on and the presence of Altrock and Schacht with the Washington club is a powerful magnet for the turnstiles. Around the circuit they are more appreciated than in the Capital, where they are on exhibition so often their gags can't keep up with the demand for new stunts.

But as Nick and Al regale the fans with their comedy, the unsuspecting audience is oblivious to the mutual scorn within.

NATS READY FOR LEAGUE BATTLES

Cronin Is Likely to Miss Opener; Play Bisons Today.

teams in the American and all of those in the National will be marking time awaiting the regular openers on Tuesday.

While most of the reserved seats have been sold, there still are a few left, while more than 13,000 unreserved tickets will be put on sale at 9 o'clock tomorrow morning, good for admission to the centerfield stands and the right field pavilion.

Included in President Hoover's party will be practically every member of his cabinet and high ranking Army, Navy and Marine officers. Vice President Charles Curtis also will be host to a party. All in all, if the weather is favorable, tomorrow's opener should rival any of its many famous predecessors in pomp and color and all that is necessary for it to be a complete success is for the Nationals to forget any hostly courtesies toward the Red Sox and give them a licking.

While no particular effort has been made to play some of the scheduled exhibition games, Manager Johnson is particularly anxious to have his team in action this afternoon against the Bisons in that he wants to use the contest as a final prep for the regular season. The canvas was on the diamond last night and it is announced that, unless it is actually raining at 3 o'clock today, the game will get under way.

basket ball demonstrations are the Boys Club, the Knights of Columbus, and possibly the champion St. John's College Team. Playground baseball will be played by Park View, Rosedale, Iowa Avenue, and Twin Oaks.

Plans are being made to play a golf tournament between teams from the public high and private schools. It is hoped that many organizations not having golf on its program will make the canny old game a permanent part of their activities.

Aside from these special events, the schools and clubs of the District will take part in more informal tennis, baseball, and volley games and also dodge, schlag, neucomb, girls' track and ring games.

TIGERS BUY DAVIS.

Detroit, April 9 (A.P.).—The Detroit American League Baseball Club announced the purchase today of Harry Davis, first baseman of the Toronto International League Club. Davis will report to the Tigers immediately and probably will play in the opening game against Cleveland here Tuesday.

The weak fielding of Dale Alexander led to the purchase of Davis, club officials revealed. Alexander will be retained by the club, which expects to find use for his hitting ability.

TOP FLIGHT REPORTED TRAINING UP TO FAST DERBY RACE

Filly to Race In Jamaica Stakes

Proved Ability to Go Distance in Futurity at Pimlico.

Clark Handicap Feature, Opening Day at Downs.

LOUISVILLE, Ky., April 9.—Top Flight, C. V. Whitney's Kentucky Derby favorite, is finer than split silk and a sure starter in the $50,000 added race at Churchill Downs on Saturday, May 7, according to advices just received from the East. Trainer Tom Healey has brought the unbeaten filly to perfect condition for this stage of her preparation, it is said, and only some unforeseen mishap can interfere with his plans.

Horsemen familiar with Healey's ability as a trainer have never had serious doubt as to the probability of Top Flight being in trim for the Derby, notwithstanding the feeling that it is a difficult matter to train a filly for such a severe test so early in the year. That this feat could be accomplished was shown by the elder James Rowe, a predecessor of Healey's in charge of the Whitney Stable. Rowe brought Regret to Churchill Downs for the only Derby triumph ever scored by a filly. Prospects are bright for Healey to duplicate this achievement.

It is understood that Top Flight will face the barrier in the Wood Memorial Stakes at Jamaica before coming to Churchill Downs. Twenty Grand last year captured the Wood Memorial before coming West to annex the Derby, and Gallant Fox did the same thing the year before.

The distance of the Wood Memorial, a mile and 70 yards, should prove an ideal conditioner for the Derby's mile and a quarter. There is no doubt as to Top Flight's ability to go on for the full Derby route. In the Pimlico Futurity she defeated the best colts in training at a mile and a sixteenth, which for a 2-year-old is at least as stern a test as a mile and a quarter for a 3-year-old. In the Pimlico Futurity she was giving Tick On, her chief rival for Derby favoritism, five pounds by the scale. That she beat him under these conditions is support enough for the fact that she rules choice for the Derby, where they will carry scale weights.

The Derby will be run the second Saturday of the Churchill Downs spring meeting, which opens on Saturday, April 30. The inaugural day will be featured by the Clark Handicap, $5,000 added, for 3-year-olds and upward at a mile and a sixteenth. The Clark Handicap is as old as the Derby and among its illustrious winners are such names as Hindoo, Runnymede, Jim Gore, King's Daughter, Star Charter, Adams Express, Buckhorn, Hodge, Old Rosebud, Exterminator, Chilhowee and others of like caliber.

Among the leading candidates for this year's Clark Handicap are the Audley Farm's Gallant Knight, George Collins' Thistle Fyrn, R. W. Collins' Don Leon, Mrs. Graham Fair Vanderbilt's Sweeping Light, Herbert P. Gardner's Betty Derr, Gallaher & Combs' Back Log, Mose Goldblatt's Jimmy Moran, Mrs. Payne Whitney's Surf Board, Ed Haughton's Wotan, C. W. Hay's Scotland's Glory, C. H. Knebiekamp's Spanish Play, Joseph Leiter's Prince D'Amour, Theodore H. Mueller's Pittsburgher, Charles Nuckols' Cousin Jo, C. V. Whitney's Bargello, Mrs. John Hay Whitney's Lightning Bolt and Herbert M. Woolf's Dark Sea and Lady Broadcast.

From such an array of racing stars a sparkling field is assured and the winner should be a worthy addition to the long list of notable performers which have triumphed since the event was established in 1875.

LACROSSERS OF VIRGINIA ROUTED

Cavaliers, No Match for St. John's, Bow, 15-0.

Special to The Washington Post.

ANNAPOLIS, Md., April 9.—Playing on a field inches deep in mud, and pools of water here and there, with rain falling all the while, the lacrosse team of St. John's College romped to an easy victory over the University of Virginia, here today. The score was 15-0.

Although the treacherous conditions under foot rendered speedy play out of the question, the local collegians completely outclassed the Cavaliers and showed improvement on both offense and defense compared to their work in the inaugural game against Washington College a week ago, which they also won decisively. Today's decisive triumph served as a boon to the Johnnies hopes for the Olympic tryouts.

Play Mostly in Virginia Territory.

The Virginians had little to offer by way of offense power and, as a result, the Johnnies kept play confined in the territory of the Southerners during the major part of the game, and many furious scrimmages were staged directly in front of Virginia's net.

The game was less than a minute and a half old before MacCartee worked the ball into position to net the first goal for St. John's. With Carpenter and Ramsey sharing in the attack, goals were registered at intervals of from two to six minutes after that, and at half time, St. John's was out in front, 8-0.

St. John's speeded things up at the opening of the second half and swept the Cavaliers off their feet, scoring three goals in less than as many minutes. They slackened the pace to a marked extent, and victors and vanquished alike were glad when the referee's whistle finally ended the battle played under such miserable conditions. MacCartee and Lynch grabbed major honors in scoring, each registering four goals.

SPEAKING OF TENNIS

By BOB CONSIDINE

TENNIS is fundamentally a game to be played, rather than watched, but once or twice a year there come times when a tennis player's place is primarily up in the grandstand. It looks like both times will crop up this month, for over the District's courts will pass such masters of the tennis racket as Bill Tilden, Ellsworth Vines, Hans Nusslein, Frank Shields, Albert Burke, John Van Ryn, Roman Najuch, Wilmer Allison and Emmett Pare.

It sounds like an open tournament, but of course that day is still far away. The professionals, Tilden, Nusslein, Burke, Najuch and Pare will be the first to come—April 22, 23 and 24 at Wardman. It is the first time anything of the sort has been tried here. The tournament will be conducted along the round robin system, so that every man will see service every day. There will be two singles matches and a doubles match every day.

Tilden Maps Out 3-Day Schedule.

Tilden has mapped out the following schedule: Friday, April 22, Pare vs. Tilden and Burke vs. Nusslein, Tilden and Pare vs. Najuch and Nusslein; Saturday, Pare vs Nusslein, Tilden vs. Burke, Tilden and Pare vs. Burke and Najuch; Sunday, Pare vs. Burke, Tilden vs. Nusslein and Tilden and Burke vs. Nusslein and Najuch.

Excepting Tilden, Nusslein looks like the most interesting of the interesting pros. At 22 he is professional tennis of Europe, where the pro is more extensive and more highly developed than in America. He used to be a grocery clerk, until he began beating everybody in the town of Nuremburg about the time he was 16. He turned pro at that age.

Najuch, rated for some years as a great net teacher throughout the continent, picked him up and extended to him the fruits of experience. He made his international debut a year ago. Last September he won the European professional singles, beating his teacher in the final round in four sets. It was a sort of hollow victory, for both Kozeluh and Burke were in America at the time.

But when Tilden led his troupe to Europe in October, Nusslein took Kozeluh in four sets, beat Hunter in straight sets and had Tilden 4—2 in the fifth set the first time they played.

He is said to be a player without nerves. He hits a flat forehand drive in the manner of J. O. Anderson, the former Australian Davis Cup player. His backhand is even better and he volleys exceptionally well. His service, like that of most Europeans, is only used as a means of getting the ball in play.

His name means "Little Nut."

Davis Cup Team Still Tentative.

The Davis Cup Team that Bernon S. Prentice picked last Wednesday—Vines, Shields, Van Ryn and Allison—is the one that will play here against Canada the last three days of the month at the Chevy Chase Club, but it is still considered a tentative choice. Prentice pointed out when he chose the team that only last year's records were used as a basis of selection.

There was something of a hue and cry when Greg Mangin was left off, for his victory in the national indoor was still the freshest thing in the minds of tennis folk. The U. S. L. T. A., I believe, does not look upon the national indoor as particularly important. Mangin will be watched closely at Pinehurst and White Sulphur these next two weeks, and if he beats any of the players already named stands an excellent chance of being a part of the team when it comes here.

No one begrudges Vines his place, despite a bad early season. He is a real champion, the first since Tilden who carries the intense enthusiasm of the men he has beaten.

Correct Tennis Grip Now On Sale.

A local sporting goods store has received a bunch of tricky grips which appear to me to be the only practical means ever invented to teach neophytes or anybody else the correct method of holding a racquet on the conventional ground strokes—Eastern, Western and Continental.

The grips are made up of a square of thin adhesive tape on which has been stenciled the outline of a thumb and forefinger. One is supposed to place his thumb and forefinger along these lines and—presto! You can buy either of the three grips. The Eastern grip is called the Tilden, but it is the same thing.

Backhand lines also are placed on the little porous plaster. That is excepting the Continental grip, which uses the same grip for both strokes.

Argyle's tennis team is scheduled to entertain Maryland University's outfit today at 1:45 o'clock. There will be six singles and three doubles. Some of the players concerned are Ray Gable, Roy Thurtell, A. O. White and Maurice Goubeau.

Walt Beuchelt, the roly-poly mogul of public parks tennis in Baltimore, was recently dispossessed at the polls of his office as president. The new administration is headed by Ed Griepenkerl, Aaron Miller, and Henry Barclay, sr. Beuchelt and his friends are endeavoring ot establish another Baltimore public parks association. If it goes through it will mark a new high in officials.

In some respects this is a Utopian move. It is like the army in "The Wizard of Oz," all officers and one private. When both organizations start functioning, with their various committees on ranking, schedules, and entertainment, there will be about one actual player left.

The clay courts at the Monument were supposed to be ready today, but yesterday's downpour has probably squelched all hopes.

Did you know that Tom Mangan can beat Vines? Mangan beat Martin Buxby, 6—2, 6—2, two years ago at Ocean City. Two weeks ago Buxby bumped off Vines in the biggest upset of the year.

Foreign Wars Vets List Pin Event April 23

Arrangements have been completed for the first Veterans of Foreign Wars bowling tournament, which will be rolled Saturday, April 23, at the Arcadia alleys. Two sections will be rolled, one at 1:30 p. m., and the other at 8 p. m., thus permitting members employed evenings and nights to participate.

Bowlers will be divided into two classes, Class A to include all with averages of 100 or better, and Class B embracing those with averages less than 100. The tournament is limited to members of the Veterans of Foreign Wars, the Overseas Band, and Drum and Bugle Corps. Three games will be rolled, total pins to count.

DISTRICT CLUBS LIST SPRING GOLF DATES

72 holes, medal play, will be held on June 27, 28, 29 and 30, eighteen holes each day.

Kauffman Memorial Event On May 30.

The usual competition for the Victor Kauffmann Memorial Day Cup, to be played on May 30, 18-hole handicap match play against par, is also on the program.

The French High Commission Cup tournament for women has been assigned to May 31 to June 4, inclusive. There will be a 36-hole medal play handicap tournament on the mornings of April 25 and 26 for the Mrs. Frank Royer Keefer Cup to be competed for by members of the Women's District Golf Association.

In the golf tournament of the Middle Atlantic Association of Greenkeepers on the Manor course last week the Washington Team composed of Tom Fisher, Burning Tree; O. B. Fitts, Columbia, and R. P. Hines, Manor and Congressional, defeated the Baltimore Team, consisting of W. E. Dent, Sherwood Forest; Richard Scott, Rolling Road, and Reginald Gidding, Gibson Island. Fisher's score of 79 was low medal.

RAIN PREVENTS NAVY PLAY.

Special to The Washington Post.

Annapolis, Md., April 9.—Rain prevented the Navy-Lafayette baseball game and Navy-Swarthmore tennis match scheduled for today.

The Navy tossers are booked to meet the Baltimore Orioles in an exhibition game here Monday.

NAVY LOSES LACROSSE GAME

Bows, 5-4, in Thriller to Washington College.

Special to The Washington Post.

ANNAPOLIS, Md., April 9.—The lacrosse team of Mount Washington Club, an aggregation of seasoned college stars, eked out victory over the Annapolis Midshipmen here today in one of the most desperately contested games ever staged at the Naval Academy. The score was 5 to 4, the visitors getting the winning goal within the last three minutes of play, after the teams had remained deadlocked at 4-all for 12 minutes and during which time the battle was waged furiously.

Played in a cold, driving rain from the northeast and a veritable mire underfoot, play of both teams was necessarily ragged at times, and lacking in finesse. Conditions could not have been worse for a contest wherein speed and dodging are dominant factors.

Navy Booters Lead At Half.

The Tars held a slight edge over the enemy in the first half, leading at 3 to 2 at the rest period. The visitors gathered strength soon after the second half got under way, however, to hold the Navy attack in check. But that victory did not go the way of the Middies was due in the main to the stellar performances of Gabby Street, Mount Washington's goalie. This former University of Maryland star put up a keen and alert game all the way, especially in the second half when he stopped several Navy thrusts at the net when the rain was falling hardest.

The second half was scarcely more than a minute old when Tommy Bower tallied for Navy on a screen play to put the score at 4 to 2. Then the fury of the game increased, play oscillating up and down the field. After a lapse of fourteen minutes, Ferris Thompson, who learned his lacrosse on the national champion St. John's Team three years ago, scored for the visitors. Turnbull, formerly of Johns Hopkins, substituted for Brown, netted the ball two minutes later to knot the count at 4-all. For the next ten minutes the pace was grueling until finally Tershmyer converted one of the Mount's several chances into a goal that decided the issue. A gallant last-minute rally by the Middies was unavailing.

Baseball Hopes Boom At Mount Rainier High

Mount Rainier, Md., April 9.—With the same team as last season on the job except for shortstop, Mount Rainier High School figures itself in for a bright baseball season. In its lone game to date the Mounts battled Millersville High, of Anne Arundel County, to a 4-4 tie as Foster Mathias, their ace pitcher, yielded just one hit.

Coach Perry Wilkinson has cut the Mount Rainier squad to fifteen and plans to carry this number throughout the campaign. Originally there were 35 candidates.

ALEXANDRIA NINES BUSY TODAY

Nation-Wide, Frater Teams Listed to Open Season.

Special to The Washington Post.

ALEXANDRIA, Va., April 9.—Two Alexandria baseball teams will inaugurate their 1932 season tomorrow afternoon. The Foxall A. C., of Washington, will play the Nation-Wide tossers on Haydon's Field here at 3 o'clock, while the Fraters will trek to Washington to open their season against Willie Glascoe's Griffith Blue Coals. This game will be played on the Mount Rainier field.

Manager Beach, of the Nation-Wide team, is undecided who will pitch for his club. He will have J. Simpson and Garvey ready for mound duty. The Nation-Wide tossers recently won a practice game from Lee-Jackson High.

Players with the Fraters are requested to meet at the Puritan Store, on King street at 1 p. m. Sunday to make the trip to Washington for the game with the Griffith Blue Coals, it was stated today by Manager Scrivener.

Carter Motor Nine Plays Today.

Coach "Doggie" Hamilton, of the Carter Motor Co. nine, requests all players to report at the office of the Fordmen on North St. Asaph street at 9:30 o'clock tomorrow morning.

The Fordmen will play the Union Bricklayers at 10 o'clock on Haydon's Field. Herbie Robinson is captain of the team.

Manager Ted Miller, of the Del Ray A. C., has booked the Northern Senators, of Washington, for a game on Edward Duncan Field Sunday at 3 o'clock. This is the initial game for the Red Birds.

Bill Johnson and Jeff Williams coach the Potomac youngsters.

Manager De Vaughan and President Sylvester A. Breen, of the Cardinals, will confer this week on the possibilities of placing a team on the field. The Cardinals have the oldest sandlot baseball record in America.

"Twins" Shift Bruin To Second.

Jimmy Bruin, star shortstop with the Twins last season, has been shifted to second base by Coach Maurice Given. The high school director says this move will speed up the infield play.

On Wednesday the Twins will play Lee-Jackson High at Baggett's Stadium.

Thirty candidates will report to Coach Art Ludlow, of the Celtics, for the final drill before the opening of the green and gold warriors baseball season here on April 17.

Director Corbett announced today he has complete terms for two games in Lynchburg, Va.

Hyattsville High Nine In Opener Wednesday

Hyattsville, Md., April 9.—Despite that progress of practice has been seriously retarded through unfavorable weather, Hyattsville High School's Baseball Team plans to go through with its opening game scheduled Wednesday with Charlotte Hall School here. It is planned to play the contest on the new athletic field, as the first baseball game to be played on the improved diamond.

Coach Leland Worthington is still in doubt as to the make-up of his team. He has made no cuts in his original group of candidates numbering around 40.

It appears settled, however, that DeVoe Meade, who pitched some last season, will be the ace of the mound corps this year. He appears to be a decidedly improved hurler over a season ago. Babe Anderson, also on the staff in 1931, probably will be used considerably, especially if he gains better control.

Ted Glasgow, catcher last season, still is on the job.

A game with Gonzaga has just ben added by Hyattsville for May 7 here.

GEORGIA TECH TRACKMEN WIN

Clemson College, S. C., April 9 (A.P.).—Georgia Tech defeated the Clemson College track team here this afternoon, 82 to 43, the Yellow Jackets capturing firsts in nine of the thirteen events.

The most spectacular performance of the meet was furnished by Lynn, Tiger dash star, when he won the 220-yard dash event in 22 seconds.

LANHAM OPENS TODAY.

Lanham, Md., April 9.—Lanham A. C. Baseball Team will open its season tomorrow afternoon against another Prince Georges County nine when it engages Capitol Heights tossers here at 3 o'clock.

The Lanham team has been practicing diligently and with mainstays of last year and newcomers of ability available is looking to a fine season.

From Tee to Green

Henry Litchfield West

"I am playing golf," said Charles Hansel, as he walked out on the first tee of the Congressional Club last week with W. G. Wheeler and John R. Leighty, "But I won't be on my game until I read some verses on spring at the top of The Post's golf column."

The air is warm and balmy and the days are growing longer,
And I hear the robins chirping as they hop along the ground;
And every day, it seems to me, the sun is getting stronger,
And the turf is like green velvet as I play my daily round.

We have stowed away our sweaters and our heavy coats of leather,
For I do not think from blizzards we have anything to fear;
So you may now get on your game, regardless of the weather,
I may be wrong, Charles Hansel, but I think that spring is here.

ONCE again there is serious agitation of the amateur status in golf. It is an old, old problem. It generally comes into prominence at the close of the winter season, when men and women golfers of recognized skill return North after a sojourn at the Florida resorts, where their presence has been widely advertised. Did they pay their own expenses or did they not? If not, where did the money come from?

As long ago as 1928, when Melvin A. Traylor was elected president of the United States Golf Association, he incorporated into his inaugural address a discussion of the subject and a promise that something would be done by the association to weed out those golfers who were on the ragged edge of professionalism. Last January some remarks of the same nature characterized the address of H. H. Ramsay when he entered upon his second term as president. It may be that secret investigations are in progress, but nothing has been issued from headquarters. In the meantime the old definition of amateurism is in force, and every one agrees that it does not entirely cover the situation.

Magazine Exposes "Pro-Amateurs."

At the present moment one of the leading golf magazines is devoting pages to an expose of present conditions. According to this authority, "the plain distinction in few words between amateur and professional is that one pays his way in everything and plays for sport only; the other lives on and by the game. Therefore, the moment an amateur receives payment or consideration in cash or in kind by reason of his prowess and prominence in the game he forfeits his standing." Without mincing words, it is charged that there are many sources of corruption in the ranks of golf and that many golfers are corrupted. It is asserted that many players accept golf clubs, golf balls, clothing, shoes, &c., and thus become advertising agencies for these wares; that other players sneak into the amateur ranks through so-called clubs organized by hotels, resorts and real estate promoters; and that others are financed by "a small class of vulgarians with more money than brains" who think they are doing the right thing in capitalizing golf through the prominence of an alleged amateur.

This is all very true, but what is going to be done about it? A column might be written, and many columns have been written, setting forth suggested remedies, but what is to be the outcome would require the wisdom of a prophet to predict. It is admitted that the problem is such a difficult one that solution is not an easy task, but something ought to be done. If existing conditions are allowed to continue and develop, the golfing game will be jeopardized by some unpleasant notoriety.

Huge Wooden Tee Gift to C. P. Grady.

Maj. Frank Chamberlain, a member of the Kenwood club and now stationed at Fort Meade, sent last week to C. P. Grady, the club manager, an enormous tee, turned by a lathe out of a block of wood. "This may help your game, for it has helped me," was written upon it. It would tee up a baseball and the appropriate club would be a baseball bat.

Maj. Chamberlain, by the way, holds the record for the longest hooked ball ever seen on the course. He was playing from the sixth tee and his ball, when it came to rest, was down by the River road, about 150 yards to the left of the sixth green. Was he disturbed? Not at all. With a mashie-niblick he played back over the intervening space and laid his ball so close to the pin that he holed out with a birdie 3.

The golf committee of the Woodmont Club has done its work in thorough fashion in preparing an elaborate schedule of the season's events. The personnel of the committee consists of William G. Ilch, chairman; Leopold V. Freudberg, Dr. Dewey S. Gottlieb, Joseph D. Kaufman, Albert E. Steinem, and Leo Schlossberg. In a letter to the members the committee quotes "one of the country's eminent physicians" as saying that "those who play golf have less illness, are better able to discharge their daily duties and live longer." Consequently, plenty of golfing entertainment is provided.

Woodmont Schedules Varied Program.

A tournament has been scheduled for every Sunday and holiday, beginning last Sunday and ending on Thanksgiving Day. There is a wide diversity of competition, with especial emphasis upon mixed foursomes, so as to develop interest among the women players. New features this year are team matches between married men and bachelors, and several miniature tournaments. Another departure from previous years will be the holding of "field day" on a Sunday instead of Saturday, with the Sunday after Labor Day designated as home-coming day, and the men's handicap championship will be played in June instead of September.

The 1932 golf team will again consist of ten players and two alternates and will be strictly selected from among those turning in the lowest gross scores for 36 holes of medal play. The first round of eighteen holes will be played on May 15 and the second on June 5.

Under the direction of Mrs. Theodore Peyser, Mrs. Gilbert Hahn and Mrs. Henry Kaufman, the women members of the club will participate in a series of interesting competitions. Several Tuesdays throughout the season have been set apart for them and there will be two championship events, handicap and scratch.

Of the making of holes-in-one, like the making of books, there is no end. Last week when John D. "Buddy" Harmon was playing on the Hermitage course in Richmond, with Don Dudley, his fellow member in the Argyle Club, Marshall Steight and Tom Galloway, the club professional, he scored an ace on the eighteenth hole, 165 yards, with a mashie shot from the tee. It was his first experience of the kind and he is receiving congratulations from his fellow-golfers.

Dr. Angelo Scores Ace at Manor.

On the Manor course Dr. S. M. Angelo played the second hole, 153 yards, with a tee shot that landed the ball in the cup. He was playing with W. I. Hutchinson, T. C. Lewis and J. W. Farran. On the same course last week William Detweiler and M. D. Nee, winner and runner-up respectively of the club junior championship, and two of the youngest members in the club, played the first nine with a best ball of 32. They were playing against J. C. Putnam and R. C. Clayton.

At the annual meeting of the Seniors Golf Association of the Chevy Chase Club last week Judge George C. Perkins and F. M. Savage were reelected president and treasurer respectively. The executive committee is Maj. Gen. David C. Shanks, chairman; W. G. Brantley, sr., and E. K. Campbell.

As usual, the association will have a complete program this season. An 18-hole medal play handicap tournament, which began yesterday, ends today, the prize having been donated by Maj. H. A. Gillis. Several members have provided trophies for various events, including a piece of plate offered by the president. The association, it might be remarked, is one of the most active and successful golf organizations in this section.

Under the present arrangements the spring invitation tournaments do not balance. Washington, Indian Spring, Manor and Woodmont having adopted the alternate-year system, only two club events are scheduled for this spring, Chevy Chase and Army-Navy. Next year, when all the clubs are in line again, there will be seven or eight. In the language of the old maxim, the golf tournament schedule is either a feast or a famine.

Indian Spring May Hold Spring Play.

In view of this situation, the board of governors of Indian Spring will seriously consider at its meeting tomorrow night the advisability of holding a spring tournament. With Army-Navy and Chevy Chase in the field, together with the Middle Atlantic championship at Columbia in the first week of June, the addition of Indian Spring would only make a total of four, about one-half the usual number. If Indian Spring should decide upon holding a tournament this year it would, of course, drop out next spring, when it would not be missed.

The advocates of the tournament idea suggest that there are nearly 200 new members who have never had an opportunity to compete in a tournament at their own club and such an event would appeal to them as both novel and interesting. In addition, the lack of congestion this year would insure a large field. The principal argument, however, is that this year a minimum of invitation events are on the program, while next year there will be a maximum. The matter will be discussed from every angle tomorrow night and the advantages as well as the consequent expense will be given careful consideration. The Indian Spring tournaments in the past have been exceedingly popular.

Alex Armour, the Congressional Club professional, is doing effective work toward making the sectional qualifying round for the national open championship, to be played on the Congressional course on June 6, a great success. While at Pinehurst recently he secured the promise of professionals in North and South Carolina to compete in the event, thus insuring a more representative field than was at first anticipated.

U. S. G. A. Rule Checks Amateur Hopefuls.

It was originally proposed that entries would be asked from a large number of amateurs in order to swell the list of contestants and thus increase the number of places for positions on the eligibility roll. The United States Golf Association has checkmated this idea by ruling only amateurs with a handicap of 3 and under will be allowed to play in the qualifying round. The number of amateurs with this low handicap in this section can be counted on the fingers of two hands.

Eugene Paravano and Frank Viselli were playing the fifteenth hole on the Kenwood course. When they walked from the tee to the end of their drives they found the two balls lying so close together that their edges touched. Not knowing what to do under these circumstances, they decided to call the hole a halved one and went on playing.

This, of course, was not necessary. Rule 16 specifically provides that when two balls lie within a club's length of each other, either through the green or in a hazard, either ball may be lifted without penalty at the option of the player or his opponent.

A miniature tournament under the auspices of the Women's District Golf Association is scheduled for tomorrow morning on the course of the Indian Spring Club.

Indian Spring's golf committee for the ensuing season was chosen yesterday afternoon. J. W. Harvey, jr., heads the group. E. B. Wagner and George J. Richardson were placed in charge of handicaps, while the matter of tournaments will be left to the hands of Frank Butler and Elliott Spicer.

TEN-WEEK GRID DRILL.

Stanford's spring football practice, extending ten weeks, will not start this year until April 10.

HOOVER SUPPORTED ON BONUS STAND

Editorial Opinion Generally Is Against Further Payments at This Time.

the bonus. * * * They know what fatal effects a huge issue of fiat money would have upon the Nation's credit and currency. We have confidence that they will win—that, at least, they will be able to sustain the veto that awaits a bonus measure at the other end of Pennsylvania avenue. * * * The President has made it plain that he will veto the bonus. Through his able Secretary of the Treasury he has constantly influenced the House on the side of financial justice and good sense. There he stands—and the whole country is profoundly thankful for the fact."

In the Boston Transcript a long editorial paid tribute to moderation of the American Legion. The legion, according to this paper, "sees its duty and will follow the order of duty in the country's present need. The rank and file will make no broad demand now for billions of dollars in bonus cash when the Treasury at Washington has no cash to give. "That is the word which the legion's national commander, Henry Stevens, has sent to President Hoover; and it is a message which every American will read with pride and faith newly strengthened. * * * Senator Harrison's letter, reviewing the immense expenses already borne by the United States Treasury for the veterans' sake and still being borne each day on their behalf, should be read by every legionnaire with close attention. If any man who notes the tremendous payments already made can really think the Nation ought to pass the hat for him again at this time, then the kindest thing one may say is that he lacks even the most elemental understanding of economics and finance. * * * As matters now stand, $1,000,000,000 a year—a quarter of the total annual expense of the United States Government—is being paid out for the care and assistance of veterans. If a vast further payment were added now, the relief would be fleeting and illusory, indeed, for it would be quickly followed by conditions far worse than any which have yet been known."

Stevens' Story Praised.

The Louisville Courier-Journal declared: "Announcement from the White House that word has been received from Henry L. Stevens, national commander of the American Legion, to the effect that 'the Legion stands solidly behind the President on the bonus fight,' is cheering news to those who wish to see the Government put its financial house in order. There has been a certain irony in the spectacle of a Congress feverishly devising new forms of taxation and even threatening to cut appropriations, all for the purpose of balancing the budget, while all the time the possibility of a $2,200,000,000 bonus bill loomed in the background to upset the whole financial structure again. The President and others who oppose the bonus payment do not ask the veterans to make a sacrifice for the good of their country, to the detriment of their own interests. The payment of the $2,200,000,000 bonus fund at the present time, whether by issuance of fiat money or otherwise, would so cripple the credit of the United States Government and so shake the entire financial structure of this country that every citizen, including the veterans themselves, would suffer from the repercussion. A panic that would pale into insignificance the present hard times would be an imminent possibility if a bonus bill were passed under present conditions. No sensible man, regardless of his patriotic feelings, would contribute, if he knew all the facts, to such a blow to his country."

"The Legion Speaks," was the title of an editorial in the Atlantic Constitution, which said in part: "The statement of National Commander Henry L. Stevens, of the American Legion, that 'Legionnaires recognize that, as much as they would like to have the bonus money proposed in the legislation now before Congress, the Government is just not in any position to pay it right now,' undoubtedly expresses the sentiment of the vast majority of the people of the country. Whatever its merits under normal conditions, the proposal in the bill of Senator Thomas and Representative Patman to pay at this time all bonuses, amounting to $2,200,000,000, due in 1945, would be no more nor less than a raid on the Federal treasury which would dynamite the credit of the Government * * * Starting as a straight-out proposition for the payment of the soldiers' bonus in cash, its backers are now attempting to camouflage it as a relief measure which would solve all the country's economic ills overnight."

Must Heed Warning.

The Christian Science Monitor thought: "Nothing the American Legion has ever done * * * deserves more appreciation from thoughtful Americans than its determination not to ask for immediate payment of the remainder of the bonus. This decision, taken at the Detroit convention last fall and now reiterated by Henry L. Stevens, national commander, is a proof of patriotism in its way as useful as any given on the field of battle. Mr. Stevens' report that after a tour of 37 States he had found only 23 out of 10,000 legion posts which were not standing by the Detroit decision indicates that the political move to pay the bonus will have no official backing from the veterans of the World War. The politicians who are expecting to push a bonus bill through Congress will be in the position of insisting upon handing out something like $2,200,000,000 for which the veterans are not asking. * * * The legion's convention vote and the report of its national commander express the true measure of the veterans' patriotism. Let Congress be equally patriotic."

The probable course of events is indicated in the Amsterdam Recorder as follows: "If the Congress will heed the President's warning with respect to the veterans' bonus we may look forward to the return of prosperity with assurance that we will eventually work our way out of this present dilemma. It is possible that Congress will pass the bonus bill so that the itself as favoring the cause of the membership of that body may express veterans, but it is also probable that there will be no real attempt to override the presidential veto which assuredly will be forthcoming if the bill is passed. Such action gives the congressman an opportunity to make a gesture of friendliness toward legislation which he knows to be unwise at this time and then he can go back to his district and tell the veterans that he voted for them first, last and all the time."

Le Bourget, France, April 9 (A.P.).—One army flier was killed today and three were saved by leaping with their parachutes when two military airplanes collided and crashed.

SCIENTISTS SEEKING EDEN OF APE-MAN

some millions or tens of millions of years ago, Tibet was a region of low, worndown mountains, rising only a few thousand feet above the sea. There were no Himalayas then. Great forests spread over what is now Tibet.

"Then two things presumably happened. First a vast upheaval of the earth's crust gradually raised Tibet 12,000 to 14,000 feet in the air. This may have taken millions of years. As it went on, the climate became drier. That of course killed off the forests.

"Thus the anthropoid ancestors of man found that the regions fitted for their kind of life among the trees were restricted. Life presumably became so hard that the only survivors were those especially well fitted for the new environment, with few trees and broad grass lands.

"Then the other thing happened. Somehow—No one has any idea just how or why—the anthropoids suffered various rapid mutations, or changes of bodily form. The animals which mutated in unfavorable ways must have died off. But some mutated in such a way that they became more erect, their forelimbs became better fitted to grasp sticks and stones and their brains became so clever they were able to use those primitive, unfashioned weapons.

"Thus the uplifting gradually provided a new environment, not favorable to apes, but favorable to man. It was grassland environment, presumably where there were many antelopes and other such animals that are excellent for food. There a man-like creature, walking on his hind legs and throwing stones or sticks with his hands, could survive, whereas a tree-living creature would perish."

PAN-AMERICAN DAY WILL BE COLORFUL

21 Nations Will Have Part in Threefold Program on Thursday.

With a threefold colorful program, diplomats and Washington's officialdom will celebrate Pan-American Day on Thursday.

Held under the auspices of the Pan-American Union, the first phase of the day's events will be a morning pilgrimage to Mount Vernon by Central and South American representatives.

There, messages of honor from 21 presidents will be read at the tomb of George Washington. As the ceremony closes a wreath will be placed on the crypt.

At 2:30 o'clock in the afternoon a great mass meeting will be held on the Ellipse. The 1,800 members of the High School Cadets will parade, and later Maj. Gen. Paul B. Malone will present commissions to the cadet officers.

Then the colors of 21 American republics will be raised, while the Army Band responds with a concert of indigenous American songs.

In the evening a concert of Spanish-American music will be presented at the Pan-American Union.

The afternoon's program will be broadcast on two Nation-wide networks and wil also be relayed to Germany, where 72 radio stations will send it throughout Europe.

AIR LINES COMPLETE PIONEER OPERATIONS

American industry to concentrate its activities in the foreign field now operates over 20,000 air miles, linking North America with Central and South America.

This company is now working on the project of tying the United States to Europe via a commercial air route.

During the pioneering stage of their work of building an entirely new industry, the aviation companies have sought to lay a foundation for growth through future generations. The question of getting an immediate profit has been secondary.

Thus, they look upon the final 1931 figures which showed a sharp reduction in their losses, contrary to the trend of general corporate earnings, as a decidedly favorable performance.

Now, however, the industry's executives report that the pioneering work has gone far enough forward to encourage them to think in terms of operating profits, and the industry is one of few which is not complaining loudly over the two-year slump in business.

While still relying for its bread and butter upon air mail contracts, the industry is fast developing the idea of rapid air express service for commercial purposes; is already handling long distance shipments of securities and, in some cases, of actual currency, and is making steady progress in the development of regularly scheduled passenger transportation services which are run on a split second time-table basis.

30 NATIONS TO SEEK SECRETS OF NATURE

radio transmission. Thirty or more stations north of latitude 55—roughly north of Hudson Bay—will try to add to knowledge both of radio transmission and weather in the Arctic.

Height of the Kennelly-heaviside layer—the invisible blanket of mutilated air atoms that surrounds the earth as the skin surrounds an orange—will be measured more completely than ever before during this polar year. The layer is a region of ionized air, air whose atoms have had some of their electrons knocked off by radiation from outer space.

The layer makes radio communication possible, for without it radio waves would fly off into space. Instead they strike the layer at an angle and "bound" back to earth. A series of such "bounces" between the earth and the layer carry radio waves around the earth. Little is known about the Kennelly-heaviside layer except at a few spots. Its height constantly varies between 70 and 200 miles. World-wide observations of the polar year will give a picture of the behavior of the layer as a whole.

Studies of the upper air, expected to be of value to aviators, investigations of earth currents and "magnetic storms" that sometimes disrupt radio, wire and cable communication, and many other researches of practical value are planned.

DISCIPLINE.

"IF she wants it I intend to let her have it. Let her enjoy herself while she is young. Life is hard, and when she settles down she will have sorrows enough and not much pleasure." I presume every person who reads this article has heard a similar statement made by a parent of some boy or girl. It happened that this particular parent was talking of a daughter.

The quotation represents the expressed opinion of more than half the parents of a certain type. Most of these are parents in one child families. They are of the white collar class. They started in life with expectations that they have not been able to realize satisfactorily to themselves. They are fond of their children and have sacrificed to give them advantages of school and social training. The opinion is a very faulty one and almost inevitably spells ultimate disaster for the child, but the mistake is one of the head and not of the heart.

They should know that the best way to shield a child against misery and disappointment is to train him for life as it is, and not as fiction, the stage, and day dreaming would have it. Since there are to be hard knocks along the way, training for life should include training for hard knocks as a part of the curriculum. The kind thing for the parent to do is to give this course himself rather than to have it come from people who are heartless, or worse.

A good illustration of the point is the case of Carlotta, wife of Maximilian, emperor of Mexico, nearly 70 years ago. Maximilian was a younger brother of Francis Joseph, who ruled so long over Austria-Hungary. The younger brother was brought up to be a playboy. He was handsome, attractive and lovable. He married Carlotta, a daughter of the King of the Belgians, and a brother of that Leopold who reigned over his country for so many years.

She was a beautiful and charming woman. Maximilian and Carlotta spent their early married life like spoiled children, free from responsibilities and cares, loved by all and bent on having a good time. Napoleon III engineered a movement to put Maximilian of Austria on the throne as Emperor of Mexico. For the position this lovable man had no suggestion of proper training. He failed to meet the situations with which he was confronted and he paid with his life for his lack of training.

Carlotta was trained to be a playgirl. When she landed in a Mexican milieu she was wholly unprepared for the trials she was subjected to. Her mind began to break. She determined to go to France and plead with Napoleon to reinstate his support of her husband. En route from Mexico City to Vera Cruz she had several outbreaks that showed her to be insane. When she met Napoleon and Eugenie she was so mentally disturbed that she harmed her cause. The same was true of her pleading with the Pope. From the Vatican she was taken to a castle, where she remained under restraint until her death, 60 years later.

So far as we can judge from the evidence, Carlotta had a good mind of the pleasure-loving type. Her personality was excellent. Everything was all right except that she was called on to bear burdens for which she had had no proper preparation. She broke under the strain.

CURE LIES IN TRAINING.

G. M. writes: I am very shy and nervous. My face gets red when somebody speaks to me—even a member of the family. I guess I was born bashful, but I am worse now than ever. When I am working I never stay at a place long because soon the girls get wise to me and say I am crazy dumb. Am I really crazy dumb? There are lots of dumb people living in this country. Am I one of the dumbest? I have always a certain fear that makes me so unhappy. I have such funny ideas in my head that one minute I am fire and flame and next day I laugh over it. Every night when I go to bed I say to myself that tomorrow I will feel better and act like a real human being, but it is of no use. Am I just a yellow coward or what am I? Is there certain treatment I can undertake?

REPLY.

You have a personality trouble in which there are one or more phobias. You should be cured by training. Time, patience and persistence will be required. No short cut will work.

PICTOGRAPH SCRIPT AIDED INDIAN LIFE

In Spite of Shortcomings, System Was Useful to American Tribes.

horses with shoes on," the fact of the horses being shod when taken being the important item to be recalled, rather than the name of the thief or the number of the animals he took. To the literal-minded reader of our day such a fragmentary chronicle may seem ambiguous and faulty to the point of worthlessness, but to the Indian, practiced in the art, it was all as clear as sunshine. Lone-Dog was famous for his record.

In addition to these winter counts the Indians preserved pictograph records of their mnemonic songs, generally inscribed upon birch bark rolls and used by the priests or shamans in their ritualistic recitals. These, too, were simple representations of central themes, edited down to the barest essentials. One single symbol was used to recall to the mind of the reader the principal idea of an entire line of a chant or even an entire sentence. To signify, "I am going to the medicine lodge," a drawing of a human leg sufficed in the text of the record. Such ideographs seem absurdly inadequate to us, but to the Indian they were serviceable enough.

The American Indians also invented or developed a system of sign or gesture language, consisting of hundreds of symbolic poses, positions, and actions of the hands and arms; and this device attained an approximate universality, the same signs being known and used over a wide area and among tribes whose spoken languages were mutually incomprehensible. The natural imitative capacity of the primitive mind had full play in this department of folk enterprise, and the signs were often picturesque and theatrically colorful to a surpassing degree. Each individual was free to develop an original or an already existing sign in obedience to his own inventive instinct.

Compare With Film Actors.

Some imaginative individuals must have been distinguished for ability in this respect equal to that of the modern actors of the photoplay theater. Certain of the gestures were so realistic, so true to nature, as to constitute proof of both great power of observation and great interpretative skill. Then tendency to enlarge the general code seems to have been readily accepted. Intricate exchanges of ideas commonly took place, sometimes over quite long distances, with gesture language as the only medium of conversation.

The winter-count was a variety of written Esperanto among the Indians. The sign language was an even more universally serviceable invention. The former probably was first conceived by a single individual at a remote period, the idea slowly spreading from one tribe to another. But the latter very likely was developed in different localities at different times through the initiative of different persons, its final development being the result of interchange and modification occurring over several centuries or tens of centuries. In any case, both inventions bespeak genius on the part of their creators, and a fine social sense, also, since both were for common and not purely personal use.

Examples of Indian pictographs may be inspected in the National Museum in this city, the British Museum in London and in the Natural History Museum in New York, as well as in scores of smaller collections throughout the world. Information on symbolic decoration as practiced by the Indians may be obtained from the Camp Fire Girls of America, and data on hand-signs and other forms of gesture language may be secured from the Boy Scouts of America. The publications of the Smithsonian Institution contain a treasury of valuable material on these subjects.

Berlin Credit Extension Agreement Is Reached

Berlin, April 9 (A.P.).—Negotiations here for the regulating of short-term debts of certain Federal States, cities and communities, were concluded with an agreement today.

The agreement, initialed by creditors from England, Holland, Spain and Switzerland, provides for prolongation of the credits to March 15, 1933. The creditors are to receive a 10 per cent installment immediately on a total debt of 247,000,000 marks (approximately $60,000,000). The interest rate is fixed at an average of 6 per cent, but provision was made to cover any extraordinary rises in interest rates in the creditor countries.

PEARY HELD ONE OF GREAT HEROES

was growing up and on codfish cakes after he became a man. What he should have had to eat was fried catfish cooked on a charcoal brazier by the blackest Negro you ever saw while he sang the famous levee ditty about "de catfish hab no bones." If you ever tried to negotiate a piece of baked shad you will understand why the catfish "am de sweetes' fish dere is," and why it produces poets and orators and painters and fighters and excellent crap shooters. The biggest item in Admiral Byrd's commissary on his last adventure was fried catfish a la Creole.

Tales of Marginal Notes.

When I read over, the other day, Admiral Peary's book, "The North Pole," and noted the marginal comments written all through it, I was not certain if Dr. Cook or some British citizen had last read it. Wherever it was possible to make light of his story, these marginal notes do that. But after a while they cease to be funny and you forget all about them. I skipped them, after the first few, until I came to the place in the narative where Peary reached the Pole and read this entry from his diary: "The Pole at last. The prize of three centuries. My dream and goal for 20 years. Mine at last! I can not bring myself to realize it. It seems all so simple and commonplace."

And then he solemnly shook hands with Henson and his four Esquimaux! "Of course," says he, "there were some more or less informal ceremonies connected with our arrival at our difficult destination, but they were not of a very elaborate character."

"After I had planted the American flag in the ice," he goes on, "I told Henson to time the Esquimaux for three rousing cheers, which they gave with the greatest enthusiasm. Thereupon, I shook hands with each member of the party—surely a sufficiently unceremonious affair to meet the approval of the most democratic."

Germ of Unpopularity.

In this little scene we find the germ of the unpopularity of Admiral Peary, in his service, and with the unthinking mob. He was not an emotional man; he had nothing of the poet in him; he could not dramatize the great thing he had done; he never did rise to its grandeur. He might at least have let out one yell himself, or written an ever memorable order to his command, or done something—but he didn't.

It has fallen to my lot to read many narratives of Artic expeditions, and to all of them my untutored heart has thrilled, because most of them were so-called failures. In nearly all of these narratives there was some final word that makes your heart go pit-a-pat just like it does the first time you tell a girl you love her and mean it—that is, before you get your hand in at that sort of stuff.

Subject for An Epic.

I recall at the moment the last entry in Capt. DeLong's diary, the incident of his going blind: "And then my eye closed." And the letter his dying comrade, Dr. James M. M. Ambler, of Fauquier County, Va., wrote to his young brother, in which the whole panorama of his life and the agony of his death are told in a few heart-breaking but manly words. As long as the Navy exists our gallant sailors will talk of these two comrades of theirs who died in the Arctic and whose death made Peary's exploit possible. They had the one thing that God didn't give Peary, or if He did the brave old admiral didn't cultivate it.

We should not let Peary pass out of our literature. He was too fine a character for that. His exploit should be told the children. In these modern days when nothing any more astonishes us—not even the hearing of a man who still doubts Santa Claus and reads his Bible faithfully and calls his family to their knees in prayer—we overlook the fact that we have the material in our national annals for another Plutarch to work up into a series of incomparable biographies, or for a poet like blind Homer to bring together in an Iliad or Odessy. In such a poem and from such a collection the name of Robert E. Peary can not be omitted.

It has seemed to me for years that our system of education lacks something, and that something is the thing that the old Scotch minstrels had and which was in a sense peculiar to the Southern States, an inheritance from Scotland, perhaps. We do not tell our children the storiss of our great men, nor the romance of their adventures. Our orators discuss abstract things and leave great personalities out of their speech.

I recall now, as I write, a venerable minor figure I knew when I was a boy. He was forever running for an office, and in every speech he made he lugged in Old Hickory, even if the old boy didn't fit into his theme. His peroration ran something like this: "And whar wus Andy Jackson then? Down an Ni O'leans a-whuppin' o' the British!" Now that ignorant phrase made a mighty impression. It carried on a great tradition. It kept alive a great event in American history when an untutored backwoodsman licked the Duke of Wellington's veteran troops and saved the self respect of this country. And it started every little ragamuffin of us to lighting tapers and burning incense before the patron saint of our native State.

Solomon (G. W.) Bloom, the Tammany congressman from New York, has all of us doing that same thing on a broader scale for George Washington. Some of us who never heard of George before are reading pieces in the papers about him. Of course, they don't tell us who he was and what he was nor yet what he did. But we get a faint gleam of an idea that he was a very great man. And so we bow down and worship him.

Should we not do more of this? Particularly in our schools? Nine-tenths of the stuff they are teaching the children nowadays is perfectly useless. Interior decorating, when the styles will change next year. Anything to get credits. And when they get credits they have nothing in their little noodles to talk about.

Suppose we had in the curriculum a series of short studies on our great men. Peary, for instance. In learning about him the children would learn also all about the Arctic region and exploration. Their little minds would open up and thrill to the great deeds of this man and of others, and, by jingo, they would have something stimulating in them, along with their credits. By such a course the child can be led to take on the serious duties of an education. Our greatest schools had such a foundation. Rugby in Arnold's time, Dr. Moses Waddell's famous school in South Carolina which educated more famous Americans than all the other schools of its day.

As time goes on the worth of Peary will be remembered when his faults will be forgotten, and one day he will have his place among the greatest Americans. Because of this we should always venerate April 6 as the anniversary of one of the greatest exploits in world history.

tered Hogan's nose. However, the inkwell itself missed fire.

The incident did not halt Hogan. Rankin irritated him, just as he irritated Rankin. He was particularly irritated by Rankin's talk about the war and by his reference to himself as a veteran. Finally, Hogan looked up his record. He found that Rankin had been in the Army only 61 days when the armistice was signed, and he made that fact known.

* * * *

A LOCAL post of the American Legion promptly denounced Hogan for his expose of Rankin's war record. What, the Legionnaires wanted to know, had Frank Hogan ever done for his country? What, for example, had he done when he was a young man and the United States was at war with Spain?

Not much attention was paid to this resolution adopted by the Legion post. As I remember it, only two paragraphs were devoted to it in one of the newspapers. Nevertheless, it hurt Hogan terribly.

There was a lot he might have said in reply, but he chose to keep quiet. If he had desired to talk, he would have revealed a little-known chapter in his career.

When the Spanish-American War broke out, Hogan tried to enlist, but was turned down. I don't know just what the trouble was. Perhaps he was too short, perhaps his eyes were not what they should have been. At any rate, the Army didn't want him.

Whereupon Hogan joined the civilian branch of the Quartermaster Corps. Later on he took a step that called for much more courage than was involved in joining the Army. At that time, yellow fever was raging in Cuba, and Hogan, in response to an appeal for workers, volunteered to go down there and give succor to the victims.

PAUL R. MALLON.

WASHINGTON'S newest columnist is Paul R. Mallon, who, after thirteen years' service with the United Press, has joined the McClure syndicate to write a feature titled the "National Whirligig."

Born in Matoon, Ill., 31 years ago, Mr. Mallon moved to Birmingham, Ala., and thence to Louisville, Ky. As a youth he worked on the Louisville Courier-Journal, his managing editor being Arthur Krock, now chief of the Washington bureau of the New York Times. He left the Courier-Journal to attend Notre Dame University, writing feature stuff to pay his tuition. In 1919, he joined the staff of the Brooklyn Eagle. After a year with that newspaper, he joined the United Press, coming here in 1921.

Three years ago Mr. Mallon attracted wide attention by publishing the secret Senate roll calls on the Lenroot and West nominations, an exploit that led to a reform of the Senate secrecy rules.

Mallon was one of the first reporters to cover a story by wireless telephone. The experience, however, nearly had a tragic ending. He and Kirke Simpson, of the Associated Press, were to use the wireless telephone while soaring over the yacht races in Jamaica Bay in a Navy blimp. Something happened to the blimp and it crashed into the bay. The reporters, however, escaped injury.

KEYNOTER BARKLEY LOOMING LARGE IN DEMOCRATIC PARTY

President of the United States some of these days."

That boy is Senator Alben W. Barkley, who has been chosen keynoter of the Democratic National Convention. He has not yet reached the Presidency. It is not the province of these little pieces to tell when he will get there, but it is breaking faith with no man to state that he might be his party's next candidate for the position the Kaw Indian from Kansas is now filling and hopes to keep on filling.

He has come a long way since the day he failed to hear Judge Priest's sneeze, and that little incident tells the whole story of his life. It has been a life of toil, of laborious study, of intense application to the task in hand, of complete abstraction when his mind is given over to the problem in hand. A man who could forget himself in such an abstruse subject as the Duke of Argyle's great work and at the same time blush that his mentor should think he was a novel reader, is sure to go far in the race of life.

Barkley of Carolina Stock.

Senator Barkley is a fine illustration of the idea that is coming to be more and more discussed in literate circles—that a man or woman who pays for his or her education appreciates it and makes it pay him or her for the investment made in getting it.

He comes from good old Carolina stock, than which there is none better on earth. That State today has the smallest percentage of European or alien immigrant population of any State in the Union; and it has always been so with her. Her people are descended from the original English, Scotch and German stocks that settled her lands in the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries.

Our keynoter's grandfather went from Carolina to the "Pennyroyal" region of Kentucky and settled in Graves County. He spelled his name in the good old English way—Barclay. Just how the name became corrupted to Barkley no one knows. But chances are that the ignorant and illiterate Kentuckians among whom he settled could not write well or spell correctly, and when the first of them wrote the name of the newcomer down—maybe it was for a jug of corn licker—he spelled it phonetically. So many of our patronymics have been thus changed.

Now Kentucky, be it known, is three States in one, same as Tennessee. She has her mountain section, her blue-grass section and her wire grass or prairie section. Jim Stone, who runs the Federal Farm Board, is from the blue grass; Cora Wilson Stewart, "the moonlight lady," who is wiping out all the illiteracy in the land, is from the mountains. And Alben W. Barkley is from "the pennyrile," as the blue grass snobs call it.

Until big Ollie James came to the Senate, the wire grass never had a look in at the big Federal offices. Hitherto the plums fell to the blue grass, where as Ben King, her most famous poet, sang:

"The corn is full of kernels,
And the colonels full of corn."

Contest Will Never End.

Always there was a battle between the blue grass and wire grass, with the wire grass delivered the votes and the blue grass wearing the uniforms. That contest will never end. It showed its ugly head in the national committee the other day when Alben Barkley, of the wire grass, beat Jouett Shouse, of the blue grass, for this very signal honor, of keynoting the next Democratic campaign.

Born on a farm, bred to the most laborious work that Adam's error has cursed man with, this son of a poor but noble family had a hard start in life. At least some folks may think it was hard. I guess Senator Barkley thinks it was hard, too, and every night when he says his prayers he tells the good Lord that he is glad his children did not have to come up the same road he has had to travel.

His primary and secondary education was of the little red school variety and what he could get out of the little Methodist chapel which his family took so much pride in. Frank L. Stanton, the Georgia poet, confessed after he had become famous that he learned all he knew about poetry from "Zion's Harp," the old Methodist hymnal used once so extensively in the rural South; and Senator Barkley can even now, after many years, run the scales and raise a tune which he learned from the precentor, or singing master, of his far-off boyhood days. He learned a lot more than his notes in that little Methodist chapel.

Always he has been an intellectual person and an ambitious man. He was not content to be a farmer and till the paternal acres all his life as his ancestors had done. He lifted his eyes to the hills and started climbing. At the end of his first day's journey he found himself at a little Methodist high school, named Marvin College, in a little county town named Clinton, after that illustrious old Democrat, Gov. George Clinton, of New York. When he arrived at college he had no money, no books, no clothes, no nothing, but ambition and a strong heart. He told the college president that he had come there to get an education. So the college president, after putting him through his paces, set him to work.

Promptly Put to Work.

"He cleaned up the windows,
And swept up the floor,
And he polished up the handle
Of the big front door."

In this way, with what help in the way of homespun jean clothes and the grub his mother cooked up and sent him every week, he got through college with honor. He says that in addition to being janitor and honor student he was also the champion debater and all-around athlete of his college. Well may it be believed, for he is even yet a rather sturdy animal, with the stamina of a wild bull of the pampas. But most of the games that were played in the "jerk-water" colleges of his day were town ball, Anthony-over, leap frog and shinny. I know, I played 'em myself. They didn't have athletics such as we know them, the kind that Jim Stone played at Center College.

With a degree from Marvin, the young Kentucky champ went to Emery College at Oxford, Ga., another was a higher Methodist college, where he completed a real collegiate course, again paying as he went by menial service. Then he polished this off with two years at the University of Virginia, a patrician school, where he studied law, chiefly Minor's Institutes, but did not graduate.

During his summer vacations he returned home and worked like a hired hand, earning what he could and saving it like a Scotchman. Unable to complete the Virginia law course, he studied shorthand while reading law, and returning to his beloved homeland, he went to Paducah and "boned" Judge Priest, then county judge of McCracken County, for a job, got it, became the judge's law clerk, and between court reporting and reading law in the old judge's office, he finally got his license and set up for himself.

Politics Is Main Business.

Politics is the serious business with a Kentucky lawyer. His law practice is merely a blind. No Kentuckian ever works hard at the bar. Here you have numerous illustrations of this right here in Washington. There's Bob Lucas, lawyer, running the Republican national committee; Jouett Shouse, lawyer, running the Democratic national committee; Jim Stone, lawyer, running the farmers of the country ragged, and so on.

Out of his own, Mr. Barkley began to run for office and to get married to a lovely Kentucky maiden at one and the same time. First, he was county prosecuting attorney; then he got Judge Priest's job, and then he came to the House of Representatives 20 years ago; and then six years ago he was chosen to the Senate.

His political philosophy can be summed up in a sentence: "The people are to be trusted with power, and democracy, if properly led, will correct its own evils."

This was the political philosophy of Andrew Johnson, whom he so much resembles physically, mentally and politically. Mr. Johnson said to Benton McMillin, one of the old Democratic war horses, when McMillin was a very young man: "Trust the people. They will never forsake you if you are honest with them."

Like all country men—for you can breed everything else except the country out of a man—Senator Barkley has an idiosyncrasy. He loves to dress, and he has a strange fancy for fancy neckwear. If you doubt it, look at his tie the next time you see him.

His record in Congress has been an open book. He is the friend of labor; he is the friend of the poor man; and he believes in the underdog. He has had part and parcel with all of the great legislation of the last twenty years. He is a Methodist of the old-fashioned, camp meeting, shouting kind. And he is so dry that even Bishop Cannon primes his lips when he talks turkey with him.

Now if there isn't drama in that little play put on in Chicago the other day, I don't know what it is. A dry Democrat from the wiregrass beat the tail feathers off'n a wet Demorcrat from the bluegrass. And there was weeping and wailing and gnashing of teeth.

If old Judge Priest is still living, I make no doubt he is pulling at his little yellowed billy-goatee and mumbling to himself: "That boy is mighty nigh thar!"

ALL STATES CENTER IS PLANNED FOR CITY

Affiliation Would Make for Economy and Efficiency, It Is Believed.

What Today Means to You

By MARY BLAKE

"ARIES."

IF APRIL 10 is your birthday, the best hours for you on this date are from noon to 2 p. m., and from 6:30 to 9 p. m. The danger periods are from 7:40 a. m. to 9 a. m., from 3:40 p. m. to 5 p. m., and from 10:30 p. m. to midnight.

Astrological influences on April 10 will tend to have a smoothing out effect in the minds of most people, and there will be a temporary rest from thoughts of strife and worry, through the peaceful enjoyments of the day. It will be a time of healthful and helpful rest which should enable you to meet your duties of tomorrow with renewed effort and enthusiasm.

The child born on this April 10 will possess no rocking-chair energy or fettered spirits. It will be a whirlwind of movement, accompanied by a never ceasing tongue and an abundance of merry laughter. It will be loved by both its playmates and adult friends and relatives, although it will sometimes drive the latter to the point of exasperation.

Born on an April 10, your character is difficult to analyze. You seem to be in possession of two separate and distinct personalities, neither one of which entirely dominates your being. One of you is an exceptionally nice individual, seemingly genuine and fine, with little care for the levities of life. The naughty, less reliable you, is impetuous and headstrong, and makes its appearance at times when your latent weaknesses break through and uproot the foundations of your better self. At such times you feel ashamed, defiant, depressed and palpitant with joy, all at the same time.

At all times through life you will follow the line of least resistance in the small affairs of life. You are greatly influenced by the people with whom you mix, and the role you assume is the one expected of you by your friend or associate of the moment. You can be very much the man or woman of the world, interested in the amusements and frivolities of the age; or you can be thoughtful, studious, intellectual companion to someone who is a doer and thinker.

You prefer to use your wits, brains and charm to bring in your material wants more than more laborious methods. You do not despise philosophy or religion, and both will play their part in the ultimate development of your character. Marriage will not bring the contentment and domestic reality of which you had dreamed.

Successful People Born April 10:

1—Benjamin H. Day, founder of New York Sun.

2—Lewis Wallace, author.

3—Joseph Pulitzer, journalist.

4—George Arliss, movie actor.

5—Fanny Davenport, actress.

6—Thomas R. R. Cobb, Southern lawyer.

He was one of the most gifted violin pupils of the late Eugen Ysaye, Belgian violin master, and lived in Brussels many years in his youth preparing for a professional career, which he later abandoned. Mrs. Hoover was accompanied yesterday by Mrs. Darling, Mrs. Stark McMullin and Miss Doris Goss and Col. Ulio, a military aid at the White House.

Women Plan Conventions During Week

Various Organizations Are Scheduled to Meet; New Club Formed.

CHERRY blossom time is also women's convention time in Washington. This week, with the early blooms of the exquisite little trees, the first conventions will begin their sessions. The very first one is the National Society of New England Women, which will open tomorrow in the Hotel Washington. The middle of the week there will be two large conventions, the Woman's Association for Prohibition Reform and the Daughters of Founders and Patriots. The Daughters of the American Revolution will have next week almost to themselves so far as conventions are concerned, opening Monday morning and lasting through until Saturday morning, with the election of their national officers the feature of the meeting. The Dames of Loyal Legion will hold their convention at the Willard the last few days of this week.

The Daughters of the Cincinnati are having a week-end festivity with a party of national officers, including the president, Mrs. Tucker, of New York, who arrived yesterday to remain until tomorrow afternoon, and were met and are being entertained by daughters living here. Mrs. Tucker and her executive board came yesterday on a special car and were entertained last night at a brilliant reception at the Colonial Dames Club, when Miss Sophie Casey gave an illustrated lecture on the "Southwest," after which there was an elaborate supper. Today preceding the special service, when the Daughters of the Cincinnati will formally present a flag to the Washington Cathedral, the ladies will be entertained at luncheon at the Chevy Chase Club. Mrs. Russell Evans Tucker, the national president, is the former Miss Clara de Russy Nichols, of New York, and the others of her board are of equally distinguished lineage. The Daughters of the Cincinnati is the most distinguished of the many women's patriotic organizations in this country, composed as it is of the female lines of the Order of the Cincinnati.

GREAT interest is manifest in the new club of women, the Sulgrave Club, which will have for a club-house the former home of Mr. and Mrs. Herbert Wadsworth, occupying the triangle bordered by Eighteenth street, Massachusetts avenue and P street, the end of the house pointing into Dupont Circle. It has been unoccupied for some years, Mrs. Wadsworth, now a widow, is making her home at Avon, N. Y. It will make an ideal clubhouse for women, and the new club is being patterned after the Colony Club, of New York. Miss Mabel Boardman, whose home is across P street from the new clubhouse, is chairman of the committee purchasing the house, and among the early members of the club are Mrs. Larz Anderson, Mrs. John R. Williams, mother of Mrs. Joseph Leiter; Mrs. Eleanor Patterson, whose home is next on the circle to the club-house; Mrs. Hugh Wallace, widow of the former American Ambassador to France and daughter of the late Chief Justice Melville W. Fuller, whose home is across Massachusetts avenue from the new club; Mrs. Frederic A. Keep, sister of Miss Boardman; Mrs. Alanson B. Houghton, wife of the former American Ambassador to Germany, whose apartment is just across Eighteenth street from the new club, at 1785 Massachusetts avenue, and Mrs. Thomas Bell Sweeney. It savors strongly of a neighborhood club. Of course there are many other distinguished members of Sulgrave Club, which is only just now in its infancy. It will no doubt be a club de luxe. The house was built for the purpose of entertaining, and entertaining elaborately, which is just what Mr. and Mrs. Wadsworth did when they lived there and just what they built it for. Mrs. Wadsworth was very active in the exclusive resident circle. Her love of music and her cultivation made her one of the great patrons of music of the highest type during those days. It was she who organized and kept alive the lovely Polymnia Choral Society, composed only of women who sang, and sang well. They were, of course, only society women who were cultivated in the art of singing for their own pleasure. The society met in Mrs. Wadsworth's ballroom regularly and was directed by Otto Torney Simon, one of the most cultivated musicians of the city. When it gave concerts, the audience was by invitation only, and woe betide any one who tried to "crash the door." Mrs. Wadsworth made her "Thursday evenings at home" during the seasons, always brilliant occasions, with dancing.

CLASSES in jiu jitsu were organized by Mrs. Wadsworth when the secrets of jiu jitsu were first given to the New World by the Japanese, and society women and children practiced this art there every few mornings. Many grew proficient in the art. Many of these same ladies were coached in the art of "rolling" in this same ballroom, to reduce their weight and bring the measurement of their hips down. All kinds of modern arts were studied and practiced here through the philanthropy of Mrs. Wadsworth, and the last good work there was Red Cross work in the late war when the same set of women put just as much energy into making garments and bandages as they did into the art of deftly throwing an opponent without the opponent's knowing what it was all about.

Tomorrow will be celebrated as their natal day by three distinguished officials of the Government, Chief Justice Hughes, Brig. Gen. Frank T. Hines, Administrator of Veterans' Affairs, and Samuel E. Winslow, chairman of the United States Board of Mediation, with the Chief Justice and Mr. Winslow far in the lead of Gen. Hines, as to years.

Mrs. Frank G. Wilkins gave an illustrated talk on wild flowers before the Mount Holyoke College Alumnae Club of Washington on Wednesday evening at the clubhouse of the American Association of University Women. Mrs. Chester Morrill played selections on the piano. Mrs. McFall Kerbey reported on her visit to the college as councilor. Announcement was made of a card party to be given on Tuesday, April 26, at Mount Vernon Seminary for the benefit of the scholarship fund of the club. Assisting Mrs. Wilkins and Mrs. Kerbey as hostesses were Miss Emily Smith and Mrs. Harold L. Parrish.

Mrs. G. Ray Laws, of Buckhannon, W. Va., is at the Dodge.

Mr. and Mrs. C. Herbert Hamilton have arrived from their home in New Orleans, La., and are at the Carlton.

Colonial Days Are Portrayed By Columbians

Annual Function by G. W. U. Women Held Friday at Chevy Chase Club.

With the powdered hair and flowered panniers of the colonial dame, an unusual background for the wit and wisdom of modern woman, the twenty-fourth annual banquet of Columbian Women of the George Washington University on Friday night at the Chevy Chase Club was a pictorially interesting and intellectually lustrous occasion.

The two woman orators, Representative Florence P. Kahn, of California, and Representative Ruth Bryan Owen, of Florida, as the speakers of the evening, brought to the 250 university women assembled at the banquet a generous measure of the charm and ability which has placed them among the outstanding personalities of Washington.

Three official hostesses, Mrs. William D. Mitchell, wife of the Attorney General; Mrs. William E. Borah, wife of the senator from Idaho, and Mrs. W. W. Husband, wife of the Second Assistant Secretary of Labor, with Mrs. Cloyd Heck Marvin, first lady of the university, graced the speakers' table.

Preceding the banquet officers of Columbian Women and the honor guests received in the parlors of the club. Heading the receiving line was Miss Harriet Garrels, first vice president, a dainty colonial figure, carrying an arm bouquet of pink roses and blue delphinium.

Guests were escorted to the banquet hall by a group of university girls, who carried wands of red, white and blue, the gift of Mrs. William J. Mallory, president of Columbian Women. The table decorations, carried out in the national colors, further accented the bicentennial note of the occasion.

Opening the banquet program Miss Garrels read greetings from Mrs. Mallory, whose inability to be present was keenly regretted.

Mrs. Joshua Evans, jr., of the board of trustees of the university, was chairman of the program committee and toastmistress.

Miss Marian Chace and Mr. Lester Shafer gave a group of dances, accompanied by Mr. George Cornwell. Gorgeous in white satin and swirling tulle, their costumes represented the court dress of the Louis XIV period.

Following the dances Mrs. Evans introduced some of the women who acted as table hostesses, among them Mrs. Henry Alvah Strong, Mrs. Arthur Heter, Mrs. Abram Lisner, Mrs. Charles R. Mann, Mrs. Stephen E. Kramer, Mrs. Gilbert Grosvenor, and Mrs. Merle Thorpe, wives of members of the board.

Mrs. Hoover to Attend Opera in Baltimore.

In addition to Mrs. Herbert Hoover and her seven guests who will occupy the official box at the Baltimore Lyric Theater on the opening night of the Metropolitan Opera Company's three-night season, many other prominent Washingtonians will be seen in the boxes and the orchestra stalls for the performance of "Tales of Hoffmann," "Tannhauser" and "L'Africana." Mrs. Tracy Dow, president of the Washington Opera Club; Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence Townsend, Surgeon General of the United States Army Dr. Robert Hugh Patterson, who, with Col. Joel T. Boone, the White House physician, will be guests of Dr. Dean Lewis for the opera season.

Gov. Albert Cabell Ritchie and attaches from Annapolis, and Mayor Jackson, of Baltimore, have accepted invitations from Frederick R. Huber in behalf of the Baltimore Opera Club, as have Senators Millard E. Tydings and Phillips Lee Goldsborough, of Maryland. Jouett Shouse, Democratic national chairman, has made opera reservations. So have members of the Bolling family, including the sister-in-law of Mrs. Woodrow Wilson, Mrs. R. W. Bolling and daughter.

Mrs. Charles P. Neil, well-known author, and new governor of the International Federation of Catholic Alumnae, was hostess to the board on Monday last. After an interesting meeting a delightful supper was served. Miss Elizabeth J. Dolan, the retiring governor, was guest of honor. Mrs. Lewis A. Payne and Mrs. Fred J. Rice, vice governors, assisted the hostess.

Miss Ruth Kohner was chairman of the dance given by Council of Jewish Juniors at the Woodmont Country Club.

Colonial Pageant Set for Kenmore

"President and Mrs. Washington arrived at Sister Lewis' in Fredericksburg, Va., on Friday, April 8, 1791, beginning their triumphal journey through the Southern States." This —from Washington's Diary.

This was the occasion of a large reception, the scenes of which the Colonial Dames and the Daughters of the American Revolution are reenacting in pageantry at Kenmore. Colonial costumes will be worn, several of which are original costumes which will be worn by the descendants of the people who used them in the days when the Washington family lived in Fredericksburg.

This is the third event of the Bicentennial program of Fredericksburg and the personal touch exists when the very scenes are reenacted in the very place by the descendants of the people who participated in them in the days of Washington.

Meeting Here Of Founders Wednesday

Court of Daughters Will Lead Conventions of Women in Capital.

By VYLLA POE WILSON.

The first of the series of spring conventions of woman's organizations scheduled to be held in Washington for the next two months will be the National Society of the Daughters of Founders and Patriots, which will hold its thirty-fourth general court at the Washington Hotel Wednesday and Thursday.

One of the outstanding features of the convention will be the dedication of the tree planted in honor of that great patriot and founder, George Washington, at the approach to the Arlington Memorial Bridge. The colonial costumes to be worn at the banquet to be given on Wednesday night will be of real historic value.

Mrs. Henry B. Joy, national president of this organization, is well known in patriotic circles in Washington, as she has been a leader in the D. A. R. for years, as well as the society which she now heads. Mrs. Joy was one of the first women to take part in preparedness work before the World War and was vice commandant of the National Service Schools for Girls, which prepared hundreds of women to do Red Cross and other war service work over seas. Mrs. Joy established one of the first of the reconstruction. occupational therapy centers to train women to serve in this work in hospitals in the rehabilitation work of the war veteran.

Another rendezvous of women who are taking part in the affairs of the Nation will be the National Woman's Democratic Club this week for the loan exhibit of rare antiques which is being held about the time members of the Democratic national committee are gathering in Washington for the national Democratic rally and Jefferson birthday dinner which will be held at the Hotel Willard Wednesday. Many of the women who are in charge of this exhibit are also prominent in the party activities and the club house and the exhibit will be a meeting place between sessions of the committee and Democratic politics will be discussed over the tea cups.

Party politics was also discussed at the rally of the Republican women on Thursday at the luncheon given in honor of Mrs. Hoover by the League of Republican Women. Hundreds of Republican women came from nearby cities to do honor to the wife of the Republican President. Mrs. Edward Everett Gann who has just returned from a trip during which she made a series of speeches, had much valuable information to give her sister workers on the political situation throughout the country.

A community of interest will draw both Republican and Democratic women leaders to the meetings of the National Red Cross to be opened tomorrow at the Red Cross Building. The Red Cross work in drought relief and unemployment relief will form the major part of these discussions.

It is interesting to note that the women who gave hours of service each day during the World War both in this country and overseas for the Red Cross are prominent among the present-hour women leaders in national parties and affairs.

Chapter G, District of Columbia P. E. O., was entertained last Thursday by the new president, Mrs. Grant S. Barnhart, with a delightful luncheon at her residence on Rhode Island avenue. After a business session, consideration of the study subject of the year, "Russia, Old and New," was opened by Mrs. Victoria Faber Stevenson, who spoke upon the reign of Alexander I and Alexander III. Mrs. Richard L. Hoxie continued the subject by a paper, "Russia Under the Last Czar." A general discussion followed.

She said, "There is no agency that touches one's life that does as much to develop one's character as does one's work." She deplored the modern theory that each job was but a stepping stone to something better and stated that she believed that if one was ever going to find happiness it must begin with happiness in work. "The best way to prepare for a future job is to be happy in this one and not to be continually reaching out for something better," the speaker stated. The next meeting of the club will be on May 3 at the home of Mrs. Arthur L. Lowe, of 2900 Forty-fifth street northwest.

CAPITAL ART AND ARTISTS

Throngs Visit Display at Sears-Roebuck as 3 Artists Star.

Hopkinson Paintings Exhibited at Corcoran; Shows Listed.

By ADA RAINEY.

AT the Sears-Roebuck Art Gallery there was a private view of paintings, etchings, lithographs and Chinese and Tibetan works of art last Tuesday. There was a large crowd present and an orchestra played. Three of the exhibiting artists were present and added the personal point of view. They were: William J. Potter, Sandor Vago and Philip Harris Giddens.

Mr. Potter is an American who has been living in Spain. He has exhibitions in Segovia and his paintings have been purchased by the Spanish and French governments for their permanent collections. The painting reproduced is now in the Spanish Gallery of Modern Art in Madrid. In France there is a painting of the Rheims Cathedral by Mr Potter which is in the museum of the city. The Spanish like his work very much. Mostly he confines himself to the houses, bridges and palaces of Spain. But the background is centuries old and has been changed very little.

It is a theme that is a bit stark at times, but strong and virile as is Spain. There is little atmospheric change in these paintings. They are architectural in their simplicity and straightforwardness. There is no fumbling in the brush work. The canvases are well organized, the planes well delineated and the color not falsified. At times in "Grey Day Toledo" and some of the others there is the contrast of the deepening shadows which make a dramatic element that is effective. "Cathedral, Toledo," "Bridge of San Martin, Toledo," and "Plaza, San Francisco, Rhonda," are among the strongest and best organized of the paintings.

The portrait of "David" is simple and has the real quality of a boy. "Mrs. Chester Lasell" is especially good. This, too, is well drawn and is painted without any falsification or any bid for popularity on the score of artificiality. They are all convincing. Mr. Foster is now living in Greenwich, Conn.

• • • •

THE portraits by Mr. Vago, Hungarian artist, have a manner entirely different from those of Mr. Potter. They are romantic with a certain dash. The color is brilliant and the manner effective. Particularly is this true of "The Count," which is really a character study. "Jim," another character study is effective in red. Several portraits of women are most effective, for the painter has approached them from the romantic point of view. There are some flower paintings which are done with the same spirit.

Mr. Vago is now living in Cleveland and has painted the portrait of the Bishop of Cleveland, which is an excellent likeness.

Crayon paintings by Joseph Birren, of Chicago, are delightful in their quaint piquancy. The colors employed are deep and full, much richer than is usually used in crayon work. There is a sense of the picturesque without being in any sense melodramatic or banal. Many of the scenes are of Nuremberg, Rothenburg, Bruges and Baden-Baden. "The Horse Mill, Rothenburg," "A Bridge of Bruges," and "Three Arches Brook, Bruges," are especially attractive.

There is a separate room of the etchings and water color drawings by Philip Harris Giddens, of New York. It is especially well arranged. But it is the exquisite quality of the etchings of the young artist that commends them to the beauty-loving public. For this abstract quality of beauty endowed with poetry, the etchings are noteworthy.

As was stated last week the training of Mr. Giddens has been primarily architectural. He studied at the Beaux Arts in Paris. Many architects make the mistake in their drawings of being too technical and exact. His etchings are endowed with an endless delight of detail which the artist has managed to unite successfully with the design of the whole and they do not intrude, as is often the way, with details. Here one does not lose the sense of the whole, the importance of the central theme. Whatever that theme may be the artist always manages to get a unique point of approach, an unusual view that is stimulating.

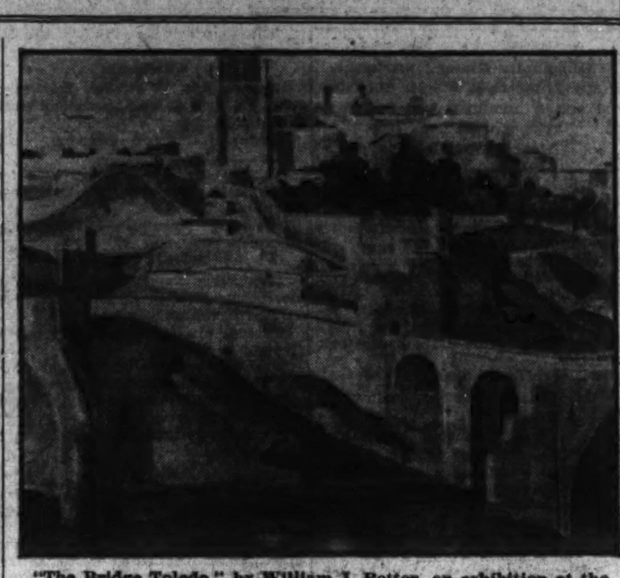
• • • •

FROM Dalmatia to Constantinople, to Italy, to France and back again to Washington has the artist traveled. He has loved the old and the new architecture and has made important contributions to each. "The Mosque of St. Sophia, Constantinople," received an honorable mention in the Grand Salon, Paris. Mr. Giddens stands quite on his own and does not follow any lead, however excellent the work. This is the charm of his work and its value.

The water color drawings of the Capitol and the south entrance of the White House are particularly delightful. "Albi, Southern France," "An Old Bridge, Espalion, France" and "The Cathedral Tower, Rodez, France," are finely constructed water color drawings. The artist was honored by a personal visit from Mrs. Hoover, who visited the little "one-man" show on Monday, before the opening. His prints are in the permanent collections of the Library of Congress, which owns the Loggia dei Lanzi.

There is another room filled with the lithographs of Joseph Pennell, loaned from the collection of Lessing Rosenwald, of Philadelphia. The lithographs are those done during the war and are of the great munitions factories and various war scenes. There is an entire series in Philadelphia. Mr. Pennell has his own particular style and his works have become classic only a few years after his death. He set a new style in lithography.

A loan exhibition by Albert Josiah Osgood, of this city, fills the cases in one or two rooms and adds to the central composition of the stage. This stage lends itself to effective treatment and has been taken advantage of by the director. Chinese and Tibetan art fills the center of the stage and fills it with color and Oriental forms which are exotic. There are charcoal rubbings from Confucian temples, painting and banners on silk and bronze and carvings in ivory and wood. Several bronze and pewter temple utensils add interest and variety to the picturesque collection.



"The Bridge Toledo," by William J. Potter, on exhibition at the Sears-Roebuck Gallery.

THE present show will be open until April 30.

An exhibition of the work of the art members of the League of American Pen Women will be exhibited the last week in April. It will be the annual show of the art members, which is growing in worth.

Two one-man shows at the Phillips Memorial Gallery are events of interest. They are by Robert Spencer and Sewell Johnson. The former is in the nature of a memorial exhibition of the paintings of this man who had power and poetry in his nature and who died recently under tragic circumstances. He stands on his own merits and has much in common with the work of John Sloan, whose etchings are now on view at the Smithsonian building, and with Daumier. His method of painting is individual. He manages crowds well and has been called the "American Millet."

Miss Sewell is a young artist who is in charge of the Saturday morning classes of high school students at the Phillips Memorial Gallery and who draws well when she has a mind to. Her first one-man show will attract many who are keen supporters of the modernistic painters.

Both these exhibitions will continue until the first of June. There is a richness of choice in the many other paintings on view in the gallery, where the choice ranges from the most modern work of Kerl Knaths, Georges Rouault, Braque, Picasso to the romanticists and the classicists.

THE House of Waggaman is on Florida avenue and from its size one can have no idea of the variety and unique charm within. Wolcott Clarke Waggaman is an architect and artist as well. He has covered the walls of his tiny house, which serves as his office and living quarters, with paintings. These paintings are impressions of Europe, where Mr. Waggaman studied. They are done with personality and a certain quality that is individual. An old fountain, a Brittany chateau, a bit of wall decoration that has intrigued the artist, harmonize with the Old World feeling of the house. A dining room in the back, which opens into a garden, is done in the modernistic manner and has walls covered with gold and silver abstract designs. The windows are treated with an informal pattern and there are other designs painted on wooden panels in which the grain of the wood is made into the painting.

Mr. Waggaman and Mr. Giddens were fellow students at the Beaux Arts in Paris and have been friends ever since. Mr. Waggaman is especially interested in developing old houses into something of utility and charm as well. He has done a great deal of work in making over Georgetown houses, in which he has been most successful.

LOUISE KIDDER SPARROW, who invited a group of friends to see the model of her idealistic fountain called "I Give Thee Living Water," received much commendation and admiration from her model. It is planned for a fountain to be placed some place in the city, either at Chevy Chase Circle or in Arlington.

The Washington Landscape Club is holding its annual exhibition of paintings at the Mount Pleasant Branch of the Public Library of the District of Columbia at Sixteenth and Lamont streets. The exhibition will be on view through April 30. A review of the paintings will follow next week.

• • • •

Edith Hill is having an exhibition of her miniatures at the Dunthorne Gallery in the Mayflower Hotel. The artist is a Washingtonian and the wife of a naval officer. This is her first exhibition. The exhibition is now opened to the public and will continue for two weeks.

• • • •

AT Dumbarton House, beginning April 20, there will be an exhibition of the toys and belongings of the colonial child. It is sponsored by the National Society of Colonial Dames of America.

• • • •

At the Corcoran Gallery of Art the water colors by Charles Hopkinson are on view in the cases upstairs. They are broad and brilliant. Placed in a balanced manner they make a rather splendid display. They are the antithisis in manner of the English way of painting, rather Sargentesque. There is a fine sense of pattern and a bold manner of attack. But the painter is a master of his method and has little hesitation in his way of working. "Morning Light" is especially brilliant and "Sunset" is a flame of burnished color. A series of water colors called "Bathers" is of nude figures which have an affiliation with the rocks and shore in which the figures are set.

• • • •

MR. HOPKINSON is one of the most distinguished painters in America. He is from Boston. There are several of his portraits of war heroes in the National Gallery. He has exhibited frequently in the Corcoran biennial exhibitions and served on the jury here two years ago. He is represented in many of the art galleries and museums of the country.

Books and Their Authors

By ELISABETH E. POE.

Washington and nearby communities of Maryland and Virginia are becoming more and more a mecca for home-seeking members of the literary clan each year. In recent years our National Capital's dinner lists and meetings have assumed a real literary flavor, from the presence of the distinguished men and women of letters who have moved in and settled down among us.

Just now in places where the writing folk gather there is much talk of the need of the Authors Association of the type other cities and other national capitals enjoy. While there are several very interesting literary societies in Washington, an authors' group, as such, has never been formed here.

Such a league would, of course, have a very cosmopolitan and interesting membership. For, not only our own men and women of public affairs or literary gifts have qualified for membership in such an organization, but in the corps of foreign envoys of the embassy and legation staffs and families there are a number of men and women whose names are those to conjure with from a literary point of view. Chief among these, of course, is M. Paul Claudel, the Ambassador of France, who is a famous poet and playwright, well known throughout the world.

One of the first of the great company of authors who have won distinction to come to Washington was Mrs. Stanley Rinehart (Mary Roberts Rinehart), who has lived here for more than ten years and who is counted a citizen of Washington as well as the uncrowned queen of our authors' colony.

One of the cave-dwelling set of Washington society, Miss Natalie Sumner Lincoln, also rates a real leadership in an authors' league, as she has written best sellers, which have gone into many editions for years. She has had as special fans of her mystery stories, Presidents, statesmen, members of Congress and the Diplomatic Corps.

Another Washington author much in the public eye at present is Jennings C. Wise, whose latest book, "The Red Man in the New World Drama," has a vogue such books seldom attain.

It would not do to mention vogues for books without a word for Mrs. Vernon Kellogg, who may claim California as her home State, but whom Washington's literary circles claim as their own. Mrs. Kellogg's latest book, "Jadwiga," has made her something of a literary prophet in the National Capital, which has adopted her as its own.

The list of those who add glory to the literary firmament of Washington as newcomers or old residents would be a long one. It has been said that certain circles of Washington citizenry and the strangers within our gates are composed entirely of those who write and those who think they do. Certainly most of our statesmen and those who have stood by and watched the passing show of national politics have published or hope to publish a book. Every debutante wants to write a novel or a modern play. Many of them do, of course. Few, it might be said in passing, have reached the peak of fame given to Nancy Hoyt, Felicia Gezycka and other postdebutantes who have chosen literary careers.

A real Washingtonian among those who have secured a place in the authors forum is Miss Madeleine Eiker, erstwhile public high school teacher of the District of Columbia, who leads the long list of local women who have made good in the world of authorship.

In our Government departments some of the research experts are contributing each week to the general output of scientific literature much more appreciated, perhaps, in real scientific circles than they are by the average layman.

After the death of Champ Clark, lion of the Democracy, a little red notebook was found among his effects containing the name and price of every book he had purchased during his lifetime.

It began with the setting down of the first two books he ever owned, William Wirts' "Life of Patrick Henry" and a copy of the Constitution of the United States and the Declaration of Independence. Among its last entries were sets of historical works the boy Champ had never dreamed of possessing.

One is reminded of this story of Champ Clark and his books in reading "What Lincoln Read," by Rufus Rockwell Wilson (The Pioneer Publishing Co., Washington, D. C.), for Mr. Wilson has given us in this book a careful record of the books and publications that had a lasting influence on the life of Abraham Lincoln.

Tracing the career of the great Emancipator from boyhood to manhood it is not hard to discover that "reading and meditation on what he read were, in a very real sense, Lincoln's education. They took the place of the regular schooling denied him; and so each book falling into his hands opened new vistas of thought and, when mastered, never failed to become a quickening part of his mental and spiritual endowment."

The possession of books was the abiding passion of Lincoln's life. History tells us he would walk for miles to become the owner of a new book or to borrow one from a fortunate book-lover.

No one who has pondered over the stately English in the second inaugural and the Gettysburg address can doubt that the first book in Lincoln's life was the Bible. In his earliest childhood his mother recited the Psalms to him as she went about her daily tasks in the little cabin in the Indiana woods. Later his stepmother, Sarah Bush, encouraged him in the daily reading of the only book of account in the Lincoln household.

It is fascinating to follow the story of Lincoln's book as outlined by Mr. Wilson. Much painstaking research is apparent in "What Lincoln Read" and it should take its place at once on the book shelf of Lincoln reference books.

Constantly in his public life Lincoln quoted from the Bible, enriching his vocabulary through this means. It was said that he knew the Bible better than other public men of his day.

Another book which had an enormous influence on his thoughts and life was Lindley Murray's English Reader. This textbook has been called "the best school book ever put into the hands of American youth," and when it is found that the prose included passages from the essays of Addison, Johnson and Goldsmith, from the speeches of Cicero and Lord Mansfield and the Epistles, one can easily agree with this verdict.

When Lincoln's stepmother arrived in Indiana she brought with her three golden literary treasures, "Robinson Crusoe," "Pilgrim's Progress" and "Aesop's Fables." What they must have meant to the book-hungry Lincoln can be well imagined.

Weems' "Life of Washington" with its curious tale of the cherry tree fell into Lincoln's hands about this time. Here was another potent influence on his life. In after years the power of Washington over Lincoln was evinced again and again, and it can be traced back to this book.

In later years Lincoln studied Shakespeare, Burns and Byron. When he returned from his single term in Congress he gave many hours to the essays of Francis Bacon.

Perhaps he found in the Elizabethan philosopher solace for what appeared to be his short-lived political career.

Just before the end of his life he became acquainted with Cervantes' "Don Quixote." It was a book he loved. Reading doth make a full man and Abraham Lincoln grew from obscurity to greatness largely because he recognized this fact. E. E. P.

THE LIFE OF EMERSON. By Van Wyck Brooks. (E. P. Dutton & Co., New York.)

In an age distinguished by its lack of philosophy it is refreshing to hark back to earlier times when such intellectual giants as Emerson held captive the imagination of the American people.

Emerson is one who grows with the years and presents all the signs of literary immortality. Mr. Brooks brings this immortal nearer to us by making him in a sense more human. He is not content to picture Emerson alone. We see the background of his times, his contemporaries and that Concord locale so rich in soil that nourished the growth of genius.

Emerson is today one who is remembered chiefly as a classicist. But there was a day, as Mr. Brooks reminds, when he held sway over a multitude of minds and founded what he called "an intellectual cult." Such a book as that by the present author deserves a wide reading.

THE MANGO TREE. By Margaret Hamilton. (The Century Co., New York.)

The long, long thoughts of childhood are graphically told in this book, written in a charming manner and a strange, delicate grasp of a child's soul.

That children live in a world of their own creating is no secret to students of human nature. As a matter of fact, such make believe is often a shield from the world without for little ones.

Those who know children best realize that they should be protected from every rough blast of misunderstanding if they are to have their best development.

In "The Mango Tree," Miss Hamilton has told a fascinating story of a South African childhood where nature furnished so much to the magic hand of make-believe.

The story is told in the first person, always a difficult task, but one happily achieved in this instance.

There was escape for little "Ungheni Sai," as the natives called her, in her garden, and particularly in the beautiful Mango Tree, from the prying eyes of elders. There the child had a second existence in a region peopled by herself.

The charm of this book is in its naturalness and real understanding of the nature of the child. Those fortunate enough to possess it, will read it several times, which is commendation enough for any book.

BETTER LEFT UNWRITTEN

Books About Maeterlinck and Ellen Terry Leave Critic Cold

By JOHN ERSKINE.

SOUVENIRS: MY LIFE WITH MAETERLINCK. By Georgette Leblanc, Translated by Janet Flanner, (E. P. Dutton & Co.)

ELLEN TERRY AND HER SECRET SELF. By Edward Gordon Craig. (E. P. Dutton & Co.)

ARE there any books which should not be written? People with a censorious temperament would say yes. The majority of writers would also say yes, but the books which they would suppress would probably not be those which the censor would condemn.

The person who goes in for censorship is likely to object to the mention of certain parts of the experience, on the ground that reading about such things will do us harm. It's the reader he wishes to protect. But the writer would protect his fellow author. He regrets the book which is bad for any one to write, just as in ordinary life he is sorry to hear a friend make a negative self-destructive remark. To this extent he believes that writing should be governed by the same prudence which guides behavior in private life.

Here are two books, both by well-known and brilliant people, both entirely free from anything the ordinary censor could object to, yet both of the kind which a writer is sorry to see. Their purpose is to correct what the author considers an injustice, and they promise intimate revelations, in one case about a great poet, in the other, about a great actress. Here is an appeal to our curiosity which the publishing world rarely resists.

• • • •

GEORGETTE LEBLANC undertakes to tell us how she and Maeterlinck fell in love with each other, how they exchanged ideas, how she influenced and directed his work to a point where she felt she should be known as his collaborator, how after twenty years he did her the great injury of marrying somebody else.

One is aghast at being thus taken into Mme. Leblanc's confidence—aghast, with that sense of helplessness with which we listen in real life to a friend who buttonholes us on the street, to pour out his wounded soul. If Mme. Leblanc invites the world to judge between her and Maeterlinck the world would like to reply that it is sorry for them both, but if she insists on a specific verdict, the world must answer, on her own showing that the break was inevitable, that the two temperaments were antagonistic from the beginning, that having less talent than the poet, she tried to dominate his work and direct his life, and that in the end he went his way in self-defense.

But the world ought not to be asked for any such verdict. It does no one any good to give it. Human sorrow remains what it was, and no protective wisdom has been accumulated.

• • • •

WE WOULD not say, of course, that it is always a mistake to write a book of confessions, nor that an intimate love story should never be told. St. Augustine and Rousseau in their different realms proved to what heights of art and truth a confession may reach, but a confession in order to be great must be complete, it must confess the writer's faults as well as his virtues and it must ask, not a verdict on any special question, but the kind of criticism which belongs to a life-size portrait.

If Mme Leblanc had chosen to write her story with the completeness and the honesty of Rousseau, the result might have worried the censors, but it might also have been significant. The partial treatment of a life, however, the special pleading of one unhappy episode, deprives us of the picture we might otherwise have had of a distinct personality, and permits us to see only an unhappy woman, like other unhappy women whom life has hurt.

Dante's story of Beatrice is immortal for many reasons, but chiefly perhaps because the love there told was altogether creative and understanding.

In the first part of Mme. Leblanc's book there are many such pages, the beauty and inspiration of which could hardly be exaggerated. She feels that many of her ideas during that golden period were useful to Maeterlinck; she goes so far as to imply that he filched them from her.

Since these ideas are all extremely Maeterlinckian, she probably overlooked the stimulus she had from the poet before the ideas occurred to her. But in any case their companionship at that moment seems to have been close and sympathetic, and to read of it is a noble experience.

On the other hand, to read of their estrangement, in the second part of the story, is an experience devastating and futile. Mme. Leblanc tries to explain why their love came to an end, but no one can explain that for any two lovers, least of all can one of the lovers explain it. If the cause of such tragedies were known, they probably would no longer occur.

EDWARD GORDON CRAIG'S book about Ellen Terry would be completely absurd if he did not take it so seriously. He makes us feel sorry for him, though we can't discover what his trouble is. He thinks Bernard Shaw did Ellen Terry injustice by permitting her letters and his to be published together, and by writing a preface to the collection.

Those of us who have enjoyed the splendid letters and who think that Shaw's preface is one of the most friendly and human things he has written, cannot understand Edward Gordon Craig's distress, still less do we understand his method of righting the supposed wrong.

In a prefatory note he says that Bernard Shaw knew only Ellen Terry the actress, and that Ellen Terry the woman, Ellen Terry his mother, Ellen Terry the presiding spirit of his happy childhood, is much more worth reading about than Ellen Terry the actress.

Granted. Shaw knew the actress, Craig knew the woman, and Craig likes the woman better than the actress. Very creditable to him, since the woman was his mother. But what of it? Is this a matter to write a book about?

Edward Gordon Craig tells us nothing of the domestic and intimate Ellen Terry. He tells us nothing of her secret self. He makes frequent use of the personal pronoun, and talks a great deal about Edward Gordon Craig.

He leaves the unsavory impression that he is trying to break into a picture from which for one reason or another he had been left out.

WITH DISTRICT MUSICIANS

By ELISABETH E. POE.

WASHINGTON, which knew and loved the late Speaker Nicholas Longworth as one of its most genial of national celebrities, rejoiced yesterday on the anniversary of his death to do homage to his memory as a musician at the Library of Congress concert by the Cincinnati String Quartet for the Nicholas Longworth Foundation, which is being established by a group of music lovers and friends.

Speaker Longworth was a violinist of more than usual ability. Had not his life been led into the channels of statesmanship, he would have been a concert artist of distinction. He was a favorite pupil of Ysaye, who had high regard for him as a virtuoso. Nothing better could be done for the cause of good music generally than to have such a foundation established in his memory.

Al fresco opera is being seriously considered by the Washington Civic Opera for July and August. It is said that two sites have been offered in the suburbs by public-spirited friends of the opera. The proposed project will be quite extensive and developed in a rustic setting that will lend a charm unobtainable under cover. This news will interest music lovers who remain in Washington for the summer and will be an added entertainment for visitors to the National Capital. The locations offered are high and cool.

In the meantime "Yoemen of the Guard" is booked the week of May 2 at the Belasco, and "Iolanthe," "Mikado," "Pinafore," "Pirates of Penzance" and "Trial by Jury" will be cast soon. In the spring presentations it is planned to give opportunity to as many aspiring soloists from the various studios as possible, in order to discover reliable professional material for the summer activities. Singers may apply at the Civic Opera headquarters, at 1320 G street, at their earliest convenience.

The Community Intitute season of 1932 will close with two events featuring music in one way or another. John Erskine, novelist, essayist, poet, par excellence, and likewise librettist of a "new fairy opera for the childlike," "Jack and the Beanstalk," will be heard on Tuesday evening at 8:15 in Central High Auditorium, in a talk on "Music in Our Daily Lives;" and on Friday afternoon, April 29, in the National Theater, at 4:45 p. m., the world famous Kedroff Quartet will be heard in their final American concert, before leaving for Europe.

This group of Russian noblemen, who in happier days were connected with the Imperial Conservatory, have made many friends in the Capital upon the two occasions of their singing here, and tremendous interest is being shown by many music lovers in their forthcoming concert. Singing entirely without accompaniment, their voices blend like the tones of a beautiful organ, and it is the great Chaliapin who said of them that "they sing more like angels than men."

St. Margaret's Church musical service today at 4:15 p. m. will offer: Organ—Concert prelude and fugue in G major (Faulkes), "Ben Jonson's Pleasure" (Robin Milford), Caprice Heroique (Bonnet). Anthem—"As It Began to Dawn" (Foster). Tenor solo—"Come Ye Blessed" (John Prindle Scott), George E. Anderson. Anthems—"Shout Ye High Heavens" (Chadwick), "The Daughter of Jairus" (Stainer), "Lift Up Your Heads," from "The Messiah" (Handel). Organ—Fugue in D Major (Bach).

Charlotte Klein is the organist and director.

Edith B. Athey will present her pupil, Charlotte Salkeld as guest organist at Hamline Church tonight at the "Meditation Period with Organ Music," from 7:45 to 8 o'clock.

Russian and Old English numbers by the Elizabeth Somers Glee Club will be featured in the forthcoming post-Easter concert by this popular organization on Thursday evening at 8:30 o'clock in Barker Hall, in the Young Woman's Christian Association, Seventeenth and K.

"The Lonely Pine" and "Glorious Forever," by Rachmaninoff, and Tschaikovsky's "A Legend," arranged by N. Clifford Page, will be the Russian pieces, and Edward Purcell's "Passing By," Henry Purcell's "Nymphs and Shepherds," and "May Day Carol," arranged by Deems Taylor, will comprise the English group. As its third group the glee club will sing Carl Busch's "Spring," John Prindle Scott's "Good Luck, Mr. Fisherman," and James H. Rogers' "The Two Clocks."

Sylvia Meyer, harpist, will play two groups of numbers, including compositions by Rameau, von Gluck, Brahms, Pierce, Grandjany, Debussy, and Salzedo, the latter's "Chanson dans la Nuit" and "Whirlwind" completing Miss Meyer's contribution to the program. The concert will be conducted by Mary M. Burnett, director of music of the Young Women's Christian Association.

Mrs. Howard Blandy, organist and choir director of Christ Church, Alexandria, has arranged an evening of music with the juniors tonight. The junior choir, directed by Janet Pickett, will sing, and Morie Thomas and Charles Burton, pupils of Esther Linkins, will be guest singers, contributing "O Lord Most Holy," by Abt, as an offertory duet.

A series of music programs is being given by Katharine McNeal Frost, with Caroline McKinley, at the studio of the latter on I street, in which a group of dancers is used to demonstrate and develop certain musical forms by means of movement. In developing her idea of "musical analysis through movement," Mrs. Frost will later use not only classical but ultramodern music, in which she will be assisted by the McKinley Dancers.

Lisa Gardiner and her advanced pupils will be seen in a dance recital at Wardman Park Theater, May 14, at 8:30 o'clock, presenting a varied program of ballet numbers and divertissements, all of which are based on the traditional classic technique.

Miss Gardiner's children's recital will take place on Saturday afternoon, May 7, at the Arts Club.

Edward Vaccaro, violoncellist, and Robert Ruckman, pianist, will give a faculty recital at the Institute of Musical Art, 831 Eighteenth street northwest, on Wednesday at 9 p. m. The public is invited to attend.

The program will include two sonatas for violoncello and piano, the Mozart E minor and the Beethoven D major. Mr. Vaccaro will also play a group of solos, including favorites such as Schubert's "Ave Maria." Mr. Ruckman will play as piano solos the first movement of Schumann's "Paschungsschwank" and the Liszt "Hungarian Pantasie."

Mr. Vaccaro was until recently a resident of Boston, where he was a pupil of Alwin Schroeder. He has already been heard here in numerous radio engagements, and has been soloist for special services at the National City Christian and Calvary Methodist Episcopal Churches. He will be one of the soloists on the program of John Prindle Scott compositions at Barker Hall tomorrow night.

Harris & Ewing.

Sylvia Meyer, harpist, who will play at the annual spring concert of the Elizabeth Somers Glee Club in Barker Hall of the Young Women's Christian Association on April 14.

The American Guild of Organists, District of Columbia Chapter, met in Epiphany Parish House on Monday.

Miss Maud G. Sewall will speak on "Guild Examinations." Topics for discussion include "Church Choirs," "Length of Organ Voluntaries." Mrs. Frank Akers Frost, organist, and Miss Sylvia Meyer, harpist, will be presented in recital at the National City Christian Church on Wednesday, April 20. The public is invited.

C. C. Cappel, nationally known concert manager, will manage the National Symphony Orchestra next season, the executive committee of the orchestra announced last week. Mr. Cappel's appointment is effective immediately. He will assist the committee in procuring the $75,000 fund to finance the orchestra's next concert series and also have charge of ticket sales. A box office, handling National Symphony Orchestra tickets exclusively, will be opened in the downtown section, as well as a centrally located office to handle the orchestra's business.

Mr. Cappel, who has had wide experience in the business phase of the concert field, is principally known as tour manager of the United States Army Band. All tours of that famous organization have been arranged by him; and he will continue to manage the band this year.

The concerts scheduled to be played by the United States Marine Band during the coming week will include the following:

Monday, at 3 p. m., band concert. Wednesday, at 8 p. m., Orchestra concert. Friday, at 3 p. m., Orchestra concert.

The concerts are to be given in the band auditorium at the Marine Barracks.

On Thursday the United States Marine Band Orchestra will participate in the Pan-American concert to be given at the Pan-American Union by the interservice orchestras.

Washington Alumnae Club of Mu Phi Epsilon, national honorary musical sorority, will meet tomorrow at 8 p. m. at the home of Sylvia Meyer, harpist, at 3327 P street northwest. She will be assisted by Quinta Frey. The club will have as its guests the members of Phi Gamma Chapter, a sister chapter located at Peabody, Baltimore.

The program of the evening will be on "Personalities in Music," and every one will be dressed as a musician. Sylvia Meyer will talk on the history and construction of the harp, and illustrate with appropriate selections.

The program in honor of John Prindle Scott, American song writer, who is spending his spring season in Washington will be given tomorrow evening at Barker Hall, Seventeenth and K streets northwest. Many new numbers, will be featured this year—as well as the better known numbers, "The Winds in the South," "Nocturne" and the "Old Road."

Contributing artists are Ruby Potter, soprano; Helen Turley, contralto; Herman Fakler, bass; Mary Apple, Elsie Schulze, William Shanahan, Claude Roberson, Louis Potter, Robert Ruckman and others. The artists will be heard in quartettes, duets, solos, both sacred and secular, with violin and cello, and also a group of piano numbers.

The Elizabeth Somers Glee Club, Mary Barnett, directing, will do "Good Luck," a charming light number. The Chesapeake & Potomac Male Chorus will give "Romeo in Georgia" and "The Old Road". Mr. Davidson is director. To these programs the public is most cordially invited.

Hugh Roberts presented members of his voice class at the Washington College of Music last evening in a miscellany of songs and in a transcription for vocal ensemble of the Nutcracker Suite, by Tschaikowsky; Franz Bornschein having made the transcription.

Alice Huber sang "Do Not Go, My Love" (Hageman), and "The Last Hour (Walter Kramer), with sensitivity. Sylvia Dare reached the tenderer emotions in the Sadero Lullaby, and in the "Blackbird Singing" (Michael Head). Miss Mamie Rouse, soprano, has not been heard to better advantage than in her singing of the Delibes' "Maids of Cadiz" and "Lieti, Signore," from Meyerbeer's "Les Hugenots." Aurelia Beck, contralto, maintained beautiful tonal equality in Jensen's "Mein Ruh Ist Hin," and in the Kjerulf ballad, "Last Night the Nightingale Woke Me." The Misses Klee, Templin and Sellers were heard in songs of Schubert, Schumann and Bizet.

Franz Bornschein calls his expertly done vocal transcription of the Tschaikowsky work, "King Nutcracker." The part of the Narrator was read with feeling by Miss Helen Miller, this furnishing the connecting thread for the various numbers of the suite—the miniature overture, the march, the "Dance of the Candy Fairy," the Arab and Chinese dances, the "Dance of the Reed Flutes" and the "Dance of the Flowers."

The group is known as the College Singers. Accompanists were Eleanor Hulbert and Victor Neal.

Preceding the singing of the "King Nutcracker," Mme. Natalie Rimsky-Korsakoff related reminiscences of her uncle, Peter Tschaikowsky.

The music program at the National City Christian Church today is:

Morning worship—Chorus, "O Pray for the Peace of Jerusalem" (Knox); contralto solo, Mrs. Helen Turley, Organ numbers (Robert Ruckman, organist): Prelude, "Largo" (Handel); offertory, "Adagio" (Mendelssohn). Tower chimes at close of service, "When I Survey the Wondrous Cross."

Evening worship—Chorus, "Abide With Me" (Lincoln); mixed quartet, "The Spirit in Our Hearts" (Shelley). Organ numbers: Prelude recital, "Toccata" from "Suite in G Minor" (Rogers); "Mon Coeur s'ouvre a ta Voix" (Saint-Saens); "Calm as the Night" (Bohm-Gaul). Offertory, "Awakening" (Englemann). Tower chimes at close of service, "Now the Day Is Over."

The George Washington Bicentennial music week sponsored by the National and District of Columbia Federation of Music Clubs have arranged five concerts to be given in Constitution Hall the evenings of May 9, 10, 11, 12, 13. Wednesday evening, May 11, the cantata "Washington," which has been composed by Edward C. Potter and R. Deane Shure, will be sung by a massed chorus with an orchestral accompaniment by the Marine Band Orchestra with Capt. Taylor Branson conducting. Outstanding events in the life of George Washington are depicted by the music which gives you vivid pictures of the strife with the Indians, the peace and beauty of Mount Vernon and again the battle with the British at Valley Forge.

A prayer for omnipotent help, a camp song, which uses "Sally in Our Alley" as a theme, and Washington's farewell to his officers all are portrayed with a musical setting that charms one. Mrs. Elmer James Ottaway, national president, and Mrs. John P. Buchanan, chairman of American Music for the National Federation of Music Clubs, have invited all federated clubs and choirs in nearby States to augment the chorus now rehearsing in the District of Columbia under the direction of Gertrude Lyons, president of the District of Columbia Federation of Music Clubs. Many choirs and clubs have accepted invitations to sing in the massed chorus, which gives the District of Columbia an opportunity to pay tribute to the memory of George Washington and also do honor to the two composers who have written such a splendid work in recognition of the Bicentennial celebration.

The two soloists for this cantata are Mark Shull, tenor, who is to be the soloist for the "Stabat Mater" at the Virginia Festival, and Robert Wiedefeld, barytone, who was a winner in the 1927 National Federation contest, and also won the Caruso prize and has recently returned from Italy.

The April program meeting of the Woman's Club of Bethesda next Tuesday gives promise of being one of the most interesting of the year. Adolph Terrosky, organist at Epiphany Church in Washington, a well-known teacher and musician in the Capital, will play, coming at the invitation of Mrs. Harden B. Arledge, chairman of the music committee. Mrs. Arledge will also present a representative from the National Symphony Orchestra, who will discuss the symphony as a civic project. Mr. Terrosky, the pianist, is a close friend of Hans Kindler, director of the National Symphony. The other feature of the day will be a roll call of members with two-minute responses.

Women at Peak In Bicentennial Tree Planting

Registration Over 16 Million Mark for April 22, to Honor J. Sterling Morton.

With planting time centering around April 22, the birthday of J. Sterling Morton, father of Arbor Day, women all over the United States are registering thousands of Washington Bicentennial trees on the national honor roll of the American Tree Association. Charles Lathrop Pack, the president of the association announced yesterday the registrations had gone over the 16,000,000 mark.

President Hoover planted an American elm on the White House grounds for the American Tree Association and has just planted there a cedar tree from the Ferry Farm, the boyhood home of Washington near Fredericksburg. Mrs. Hoover planted the Elmira College Club tree.

Some of the outstanding registrations are the planting of 53,000 trees by the schools of Dayton, Ohio, under the direction of the Garden Clubs.

Planting and marking on April 15 of a Washington memorial grove at Hains Point, on the famous cherry blossom drive by the District of Columbia Daughters of the American Revolution.

Planting and marking on April 13 of a memorial beech on the Arlington Memorial Bridge approach, by the National Society Daughters of Founders and Patriots of America. This registration is by Mrs. Henry B. Joy, of Grosse Points Farms, Mich., and Mrs. John Laidlaw Buel, of Litchfield, Conn.

Dedication and marking at American University campus April 13 of a memorial elm by the National Society of New England women returning to Washington for the national convention.

Boy Scouts of Steubenville, Ohio, area, 16,000 trees.

Dedication of 2,000,000 trees April 22 at Reading, Pa., by the Berk County Conservation Society. This is the leading community planting thus far reported to the American Tree Association.

Hawaii Boy Scouts have registered 100 per cent and are holding dedication programs next week as is the Hilo Women's Club.

The tree planting message has gone around the world, for the American Tree Association has registered several American ambassadors in foreign countries. A tree planter, if he dedicates his tree to the memory of George Washington, reports to the American Tree Association and receives an application blank.

In Wisconsin the Federation of Women's Clubs has begun a seven-year project which will plant 640 acres as a memorial forest for Washington. The Edgeworth Club in Rhode Island has a State-wide project under way and the same can be said of the Michigan Federation of Women's Clubs. The call to plant has resulted in big highway beautification of many areas in towns and cities and town forests.

Schools by the thousands are beautifying a campus or a playground. The women's clubs, the D. A. R., the parent-teacher associations have sent the American Tree Association message into every unit. The Scouts, Camp Fire Girls, civic organizations, such as Rotary and Kiwanis, have taken up the plan.

King Boris III of Bulgaria has joined this great tree planting army and marked the bicentennial of the birth of George Washington in 1932 by presenting to Henry W. Shoemaker, the American Minister at Sofia, two very rare Balkan varieties of evergreens, one for the legation, the other for the American School near Sofia. These trees have been planted by Minister Shoemaker, who is from Pennsylvania.

Joseph C. Grew, former American Ambassador at Istanbul, Turkey, was the first representative of the American Government in the foreign land to register on the national honor roll when he reported the planting of three black walnut trees to Mr. Pack. Following this has come the registration of Fred Morris Dearing, American Ambassador at Lima, Peru, who, with Garrett G. Ackerson, jr., as a witness, has planted a tree to mark the Bicentennial of the birth of George Washington.

California is coming in with a big registration score. Los Angeles is making tree planting a major project of the Bicentennial program, as is Kansass City, Mo., and every town in Florida. The women's clubs of Ohio are aiming at 100 per cent before the end of 1932. The 4-H Clubs of the country have big programs under way, as have the Masonic fraternity, Boy Scouts, civic organizations such as the Rotary, Kiwanis, Lions Clubs, and chambers of commerce at Jackson, Grand Rapids, Lansing, Joliet, and dozens of towns in Texas.

The Bicentennial tree planting plan has been adopted by the North Carolina Federation of Women's Clubs. Hundreds of application blanks for membership in the tree planting army, tree planting suggestions, and other printed matter have been sent to Mrs. E. S. Paddison, the conservation chairman. The education work has the heartiest cooperation of J. S. Holmes, the State forester, and F. H. Claridge, the assistant forester.

"The clubwomen of the country are doing a great advance work on the Bicentennial program," said Mrs. John Dickinson Sherman, in charge of women's activities at the Washington Bicentennial headquarters today. Mrs. Sherman is a former president of the General Federation. "The report sent to me by the American Tree Association of the way they are registering tree planting is one of the largest phases of the program. The clubwomen in Florida, Maine, Mississippi, Ohio, Indiana, Arkansas, Pennsylvania and in Texas have carried the tree planting message into all the schools, according to the reports made to me."

Girls Friendly Society

At the Epiphany Branch Monday night a business meeting was held, as the admission service was postponed until April 18. Various branch officers made reports, and Miss Lillian Dusenbury, from the Epiphany Home, gave an interesting talk on the islands of Jamaica and Bermuda. The large sugar donation was sent to the Episcopal Ear, Eye and Throat Hospital. On April 11 Mr. Frederick Snyder will give his final discussion of current events, and it is hoped that every member and many friends will be present.

The Girls' Friendly Society of St. Stephen's Church, Sixteenth and Newton streets northwest, announces an entertainment, "Tuning Up for the Wedding," and a skit, "Who's Who," at 8 p. m., April 15, with dancing from 10 to 1, featuring "The Aristocrats." Adult tickets are 35 cents and children's are 20 cents. Don't miss a good time.

The regular diocesan meeting was held at Epiphany Parish Hall on April 8.

Curley Club Plans Tenth Celebration

Testimonial Banquet for Archbishop Among Events for Anniversary.

Preliminary arrangements have been perfected for the tenth anniversary celebration of the Curley Club, which will take place during May. One of the outstanding features of the celebration will be a testimonial banquet to be tendered to the Most. Rev. Michael J. Curley, Archbishop of Baltimore, which will be held in the Willard Hotel Monday evening, May 9. The celebration will open with the entire membership of the organization assembling in one of the downtown churches Sunday, May 1, where mass will be celebrated by the Rev. Francis X. Cavanagh, spiritual director of the club.

Other features of the tenth anniversary celebration will include a large dance in one of the local hotels, a musicale, a reception and an elaborate entertainment which will follow the regular meetings during May, Thursday, May 12, and Thursday, May 26. William J. Boyd is chairman of the tenth anniversary committee, assisted by Miss Dorothy Barrett, Miss Gretchen Baden, Miss Catherine O'Connor, Miss Nonie Daly, Francis A. McCann, Luke O'Reilly and Roland J. Hyland.

John B. Townsend, chairman of the chronicle committee, is arranging for the publication of a handsome souvenir tenth anniversary program, which will include a historical synopsis of the Curley Club and other articles of interest. A special historical committee, under the direction of John L. Donnelly, has been gathering data for several months for the anniversary number of the Curley Club monthly bulletin and the special souvenir program.

The Bicentennial colonial dance, held under auspices of the club, Saturday evening, in the Continental Hotel, was very successful. About 100 persons attended the affair. The judges, Mrs. Harris, Mrs. Cecil Mears and Miss Peggy Hurdle, awarded the prize for the best costume to Mrs. Frank Pearson, who was attired as "Martha Washington." Frank Pearson as "The Father of His Country," received honorable mention. The Curley Club was honored with the presence of 30 members of the "13 Club" of the International Correspondence Schools at the dance.

The Easter basket and box contest, conducted by the Curley Club, following the regular meeting March 31, was most successful, the judges awarding the coveted prize to Miss Gretchen Baden for the most artistically and attractively decorated basket. The judges included Mrs. Mattimore, Miss Bowles and Mr. Irons, and after the award had been announced, the baskets and boxes were auctioned to the highest bidders. Funds from the sale were applied to the scholarship fund of the organization.

The next meeting of the club will be held in the Continental Hotel, Thursday. Dancing will follow the business meeting.

The Married Life of Helen and Warren

The Quais of Paris Bait Warren's Scoffing Quest.

By MABEL HERBERT URNER

THE Quais of Paris! The famous old book mart on the Seine.

Stalls all along the stone parapet of the left bank. The traditional haunt of students, collectors, idlers.

Each stand an alluring clutter of shabby volumes. Quaint colored prints tacked inside the propped-up lids.

Leisurely patrons poring over books and portfolios.

The stallkeepers mostly old men. Dozing on camp chairs under the friendly trees.

Below, the lazy river with its loitering little boats. Inert fishermen adding to the dreamy languor.

The thrill of exploring! And this afternoon with Warren—one of his rare free-from-business days.

"Huh, nothing decent," stopping at a jumbled stall. "Prehistoric magazines and a raft of trashy thrillers."

"Here's some old volumes," Helen scanned the musty bindings. "You might find something——"

"Fat chance! Just a waste of time."

"But such an ideal day for browsing! And dear, some of the stalls further up have antiques."

"So that's what you're after? Well, hope they're better than the books."

"Yet you do hear of wonderful finds along the Quais."

"Not any more," tossing back a theological tome. "Used to have some rare stuff—but all played out now."

Sauntering on from stall to stall, Helen alert for old silhouettes.

"I'll get a few of these for Mrs. Stevens," turning over some fashion plates. "These Directoire costumes are charming—and earlier than Godey's."

"Well, if you must buy tripe—at least those don't take up much room."

Stacks of frayed sheet music. Faded photographs — forgotten actresses with wasp waists and bulbous busts.

And propped against every stand, portfolios of sketches. The charcoal-and-watercolor output of the Latin Quarter.

Further on a colorful display of stamps. Assorted lots in transparent envelopes. An extra large packet marked "Reclame."

"A thousand stamps of all countries,'" Helen's laborious translation. "Only 6 francs—a quarter! Oh, I'll take these."

"Huh, you go in for quantity—not quality! What d'you know about stamps?"

"Why, nothing. But they'll do to start a collection for Bobbie."

"That youngster's more likely to start a fire with 'em," he scoffed, paying for her purchase.

"Dear, how far do these stalls run?" peering down the endless line.

"Must be hundreds of 'em," intent on a shabby volumne. "Hello, this Stevenson looks like a first. By George, it is—1892!"

"Oh, I knew you'd find something!" thrilled. "I knew——"

"Now pipe down. Probably something wrong with it. Darnation, lacks three pages! Well, I'm not buying cripples."

Stalking on, swinging his cane with disgusted vigor.

At last a few antiques. But mostly coins and medals.

"Want this for a paperweight?" Warren picked up a jagged lump of quartz.

"No, no! Dear, in some ways you really have awful taste."

"What's so awful about that? Here, this stuff's more in your line."

At the next few stalls a scattering of miniatures, candlesticks, odd bits of jewelry. But either imperfect or mediocre.

Old weapons. Elaborate daggers and sword guards. Long cruel rapiers.

"Not much call for those now. But dueling used to be the national sport."

"Oh, a gas mask—how gruesome! And this German helmet with the bullet hole — —"

"Hello, there's Laperouse!" glancing across at the famous restaurant. "Darned good grub—might come back for dinner. That and the Tour d'Argent the best on the Quais."

"Two hundred francs for this!" intent on an old coral brooch. "Why, for anything good they're no cheaper than the shops."

"Now you never get anything worthwhile for nothing. Least of all in Paris! You're always out for a miracle."

But Helen's interest diverted to a small black terrier, curled on a seedy coat.

The stallkeeper beamingly produced a lump of sugar. Not yielded until properly begged for with supplicating paws.

"What a dear old man! Can't we buy somethnig from him?"

A hopeful inventory of his stock. A few antique bits—nothing good. If that Napoleon snuff box weren't so badly scratched — —

"Wow, here's a find!" exploded Warren. "But only the second volume!"

"Of what?" eagerly. "What is it?"

"Sternes Sentimental Journal—first edition!" still searching. "But no good if it hasn't the other volume."

"Oh, he must have—I'm sure he has!" breathlessly. "Ask him."

The old man's doubtful shrug. Assisting in their book-by-book scrutiny.

But no mate for the small calfbound volume!

"Of all the rotten luck!" growled Warren, tossing it down. "If you do strike something decent—either a cripple or an odd volume!"

"Dear, get it anyway! Only 30 francs. You may run across the other somewhere——"

"What an optimist! Now, I'm not loading up with odd volumes on a million-to-one chance," stalking on.

But Helen, lingering, ostensibly to pat the friendly terrier.

Why not? Worth risking 30 francs!

The bills quickly slipped to the twinkling old man.

Hurrying on with the volume under her arm, concealed by the stamp packet.

"Now, haven't you killed enough time over these junk heaps?" grumped Warren when she joined him. "Beginning to close up, anyway."

"Only that one," as the stall ahead was covered and locked. "The others aren't leaving yet."

"Well, they soon will be. And I'm about fed up with this rubbish."

"Wait, isn't Notre Dame wonderful from here?" gazing across the river.

The historic cathedral on its tiny island ethereal in the sunset glow.

"Paris is lovely just before dark! The most glamorous time of the day——"

"Time my appetite begins to function," squelching her effusion. "There's a cafe across the street. How about an apertif?"

"Why, I've only these cheap stamps and fashion plates! I did want to find some old bit. But anything good is so high."

"Huh, you won't land many bargains along here," scanning some dusty volumes. "Now you can do just two more stalls. Now I give my dogs a rest!"

Helen turning through a portfolio of silhouettes. Mostly ordinary scissorgraphs—and rather late. The few painted ones neither intricate nor distinctive.

"Great guns!" an incredulous eruption.

"Now what?" peering over his arm.

"Well, I'll be darned! Volume one!"

"Not the Sentimental Journey?" ecstatically.

"Yes, and first edition!" Warren staring at the title page. "What a fluke! Wouldn't happen again in a thousand years."

"And you wouldn't buy that second volume! But I——"

"Now lay off that I-told-you-so!" he snapped. "Here, combien? Vingt?"

Thrusting the 20-franc note at the man, he pocketed the book.

"My dear, I——"

"You wait here! I'll sprint back before that old Johnny closes up."

Off before she could explain! His height and haste conspicuous on the leisurely quay.

His mad dash back for the other volume—and it was safe under her arm!

Would the man tell him she had bought it? Even if he did, Warren wouldn't understand — beyond his French.

Visioning his chagrin. But a merited penalty for scoffing at the Quais!

While she waited, feigned interest in a faded pearl-sticked fan.

At last his dejected return. Frustration in the limp swing of his cane.

"Of all the tough breaks! It's sold! Come on, here's where I have a drink."

"Sold? He didn't say to whom?" innocently.

"He jabbered plenty but all I could make out was sold. And people who buy off the Quais don't leave their addresses."

Irately hustling her across the street, defying the erratic Paris traffic.

At the awninged cafe, settling at one of the small sidewalk tables.

"Deux Dubonnet," to the aproned waiter. Then, belligerently, "Now go ahead, rub it in! You told me to get it! I'll be hearing that the rest of the trip."

Jerking from his pocket the first volume. Glowering at it vindictively.

"Might as well pitch this into the Seine! All the good it is——"

Helen dramatically delaying her disclosure. A surprise-enhancing pause. Then, demurely, holding out the other volume.

"Does this make it any better?"

His jubilant whoop as he snatched it.

"Great Scott! So it was YOU who bought it? But how——"

"After you'd gone on. I — I just had a feeling that I should."

"And let me chase back like a blamed fool! Why in blazes didn't you tell me?"

"You dashed off before I'd a chance! Besides, you were so contemptuous about the Quais. So sure there wasn't anything to be found——"

"Thought you'd play up the suspense, eh?" he grinned. "Well, you had a darned lucky hunch, Kitten. A find like that—collector's pipe-dream!"

"And only 50 francs for both volumes! Dear, what do you think they're worth?"

"Two hundred bucks, at least," studying a faded inscription on the flyleaf. "Wait'll they hear this story at the club! Probably think I'm yarning."

"Oh, I've always wanted you to explore those stalls—and you never would! You wouldn't today, if I hadn't just dragged you there."

"Well, that was a profitable promenade," tossing the garcon an overgenerous tip. "Worth poundin' the pavement a couple of miles. Never get another break like that. But hereafter whenever we hit Paris—we take a swirl along the Quais!"

Chevy Chase Club Planning For Concert

Chorus of 75 Voices Will Have Part in Annual Spring Affair.

The spring concert given by the music section of the Woman's Club of Chevy Chase, Md., will take place on Wednesday, April 20, at 8 o'clock at the Chevy Chase-Bethesda High School.

This annual event, which is eagerly looked forward to by music lovers of the Capital, promises to be an occasion of unusual merit. The chorus, which numbers 75 voices will be assisted by the Chevy Chase Centers. The section has been fortunate in securing as guest artists, two outstanding local musicians, Richard Lorleburg, cellist, and Mr. Santelman, violinist.

The section had its inception under Mrs. Theodore Norcross. For the past eleven years, Mr. Herndon Morsell, whose name is synonymous with good music, has been the director. The chorus won second place at the State federation convention last year and has given several radio broadcasts.

Mrs. J. Harry Cunningham, the talented leader, has written many songs, one of which received a prize from the League of American Pen Women. She has also done some clever work in light opera. Mrs. Sara Colman and Mrs. Joseph H. DeVeau are in charge of tickets.

Two luncheons and a tea are on the calendar of the week. The first luncheon will be for the French section on Tuesday at the home of Mrs. J. H. Dellinger with Mrs. James Pierce as assisting hostess and Mrs. Eugene Stevens in charge of the program. On Tuesday also the nature section will walk at 10 in the morning; the building fund committee will meet with Mrs. George Mikkelson; the membership committee will meet with Mrs. William R. Meyers; in the afternoon, the art section will be the guests of Mrs. L. Magnusson, while the social section will be entertained at tea by Mrs. Hugh Phillips.

The musical appreciation group will hold their bimonthly meeting on Thursday at the home of Mrs. George Gravatt. A new department of the music section has been inaugurated. This music ensemble is for members who play any kind of musical instrument. It meets every Monday at the home of Miss Alice Harvey.

The literature section will have the last meeting of the season at the home of Mrs. Earl Clapp. Mrs. Charles D. Curtiss promises a program of unusual interest on "British and American Literary Magazines." Mrs. Eugene Stevens, Mrs. Douglas Greisemer and Mrs. Herbert Insley will all contribute to the program. Mrs. Jesse Swigart, Mrs. James E. Tibbets, Mrs. Edward W. Holmes and Mrs. George S. Jamieson will assist at the tea table.

Takoma Park Club

A tea for new members and their sponsors was given in the home of Mrs. Norman E. McIndoo, Thursday, March 31, from 3 to 4 o'clock, by the membership committee and the executive board. Mrs. E. Horace Siegler presided at the tea table and Miss Williams entertained the guests with several piano selections.

The club enjoyed a very special treat at its regular meeting, April 5. After the business meeting the program was turned over to Mrs. Thomas W. Marshall, chairman of the literature section, who introduced the speaker for the afternoon, Mrs. George Bowerman. Mrs. Bowerman gave a resume of the outstanding books of the day, both fiction and nonfiction, briefly reviewing Ford's "Return Yesterday," and Fay's "George Washington, Republican and Aristocrat." Members of the Fortnightly Book Club of Takoma were guests. At the conclusion of the meeting every one was invited to a tea served by the literature department in the basement of the library.

The literature department will hold its regular meeting in the branch library, Monday, April 11, at 10 o'clock. Mrs. W. A. Miller will review "Poetry of 1930-31."

D. C. Federation

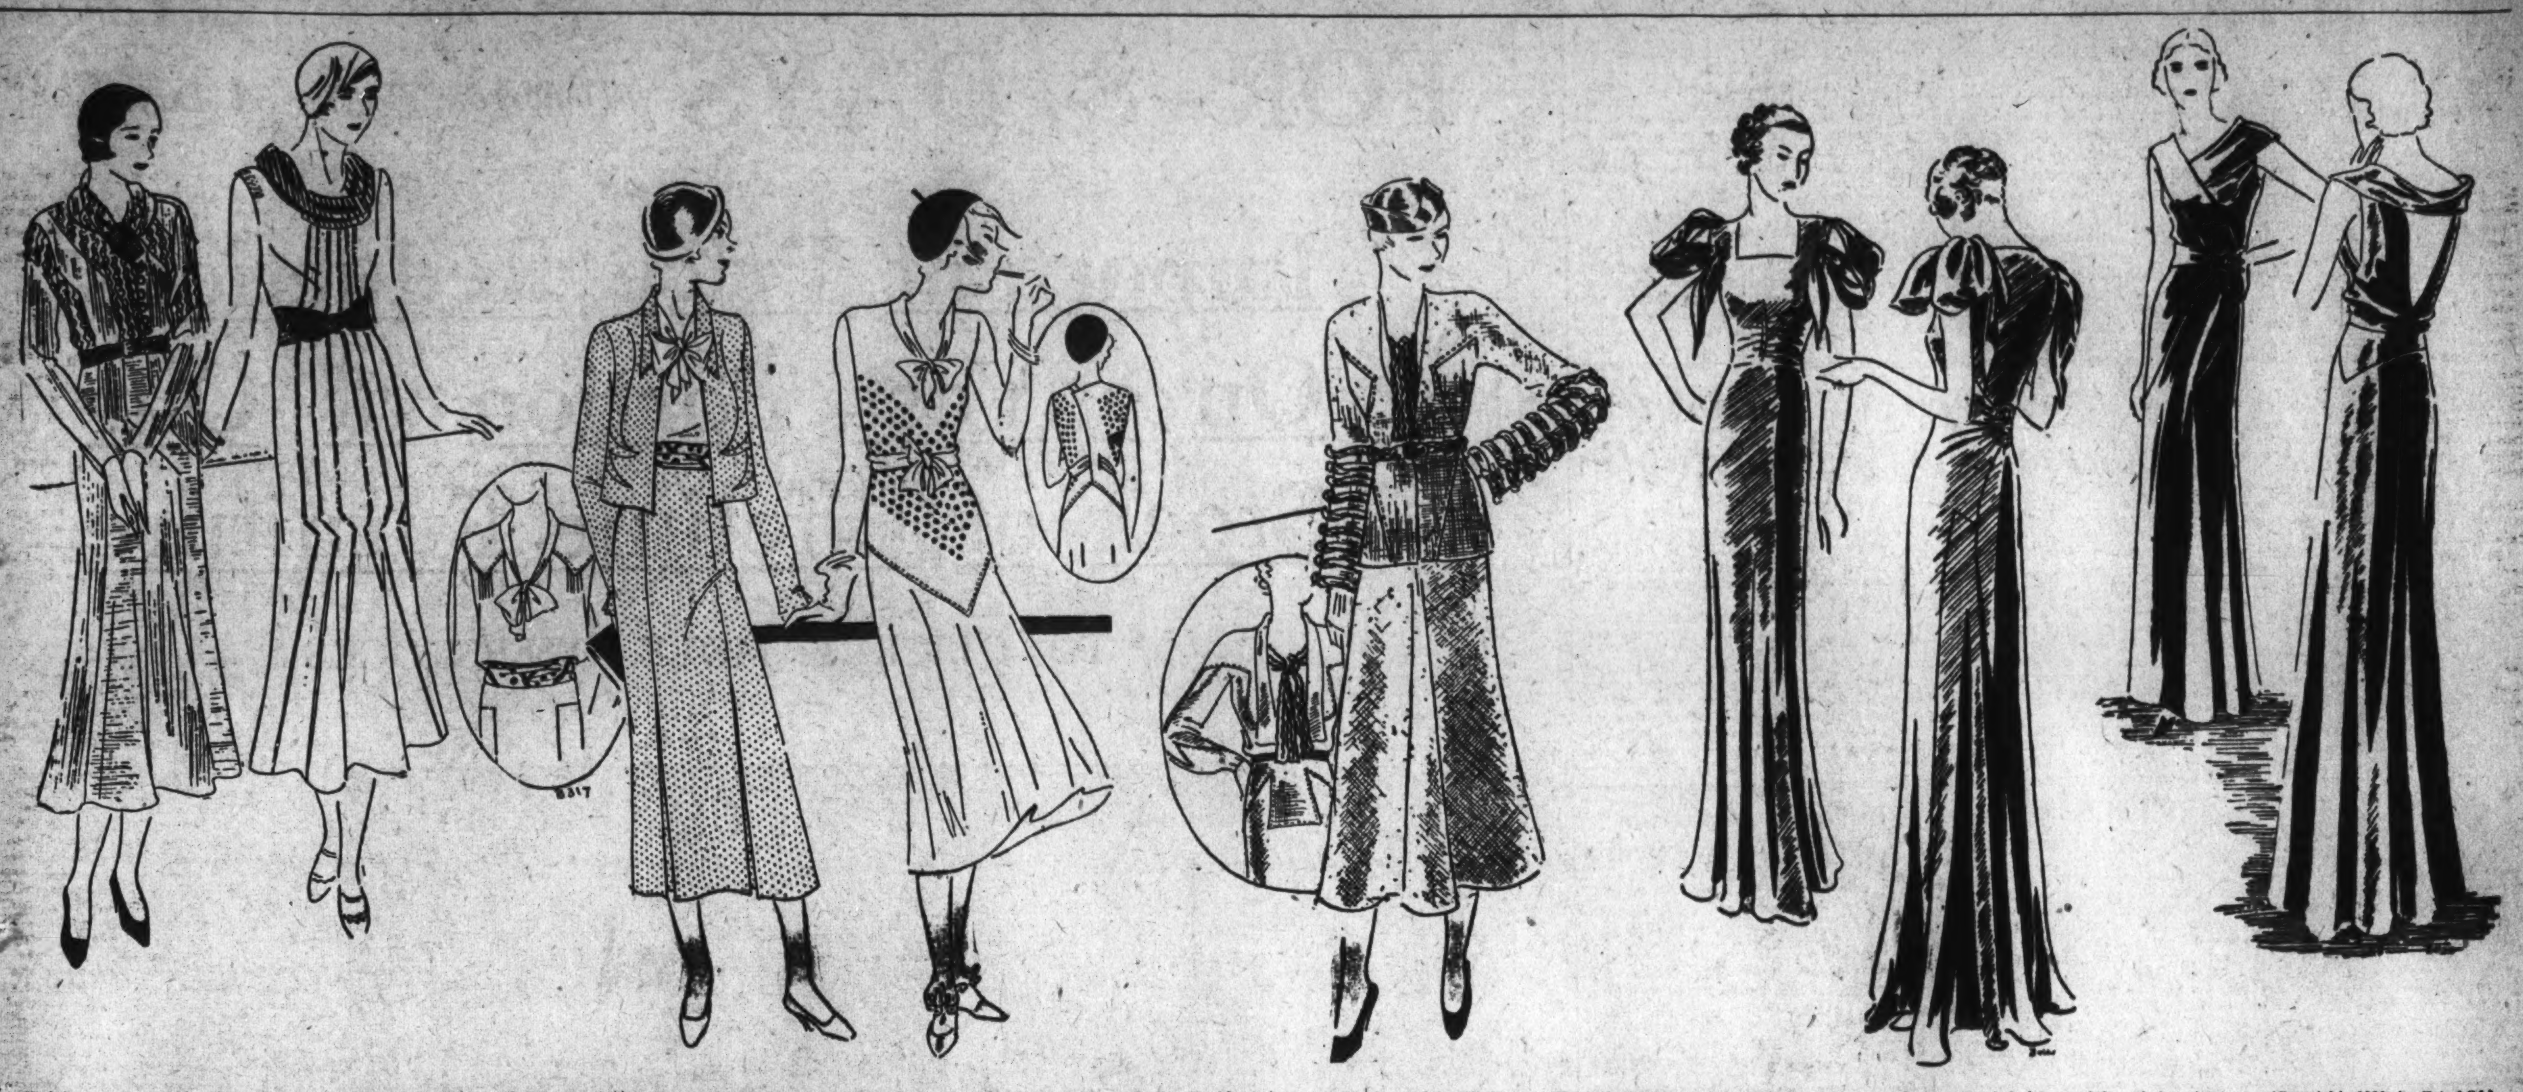
Mrs. Edgar B. Meritt, on Tuesday, with officers of the federation, joined the visiting Mid-West club women when they were received by Mrs. Hoover at the White House. Mrs. Meritt presented the officers and the visiting women representing Illinois, Wisconsin, Michigan, Ohio and West Virginia.

A drive through Rock Creek Park and around the Speedway, with tea at the Women's City Club was part of a busy day Friday for the visitors, in which the District of Columbia Federation of Women's Clubs was hostess.

Lieut. Rhoda J. Milliken, of the Woman's Bureau of the Police Department, will be the speaker over Station WMAL Friday morning at 10:45 o'clock, on the "Among Women" program sponsored by the District of Columbia Federation of Women's Clubs. "Work of the Women's Bureau," will be the subject of the talk. Mrs. H. M. Hunter will announce.

A musical program will be given on Wednesday afternoon at 3 o'clock over Station WJSV.

NEW BALL GOWNS EXTREMELY DECOLLETTE



Violet crepe makes the cinema frock, illustrated by the first two figures, from Lelong. The square neckline and draped loops of fabric covering the shoulders are effective, while a few rows of shirring hold the gathers around the waist.

Something of a tailored or sports quality marks many of the smartest of the new evening gowns, and this is noticeable in the Patou showing. The model sketched in the next two drawings is of satin in the dark blue which the house features, with a scarf treatment of the decolete which illustrates this new trend.

In the next, insets of knitted yarn in the same "off white" as the dress are worked into a loose hopsacking fabric. There is a tiny scarf at the neck, made of the tricot and material tipped by a tab of yellow and black woolen. The belt is yellow leather with black stripe and the buckle is black galalith and nickle.

A tennis dress of silky coarse linen weave has its vertical seams outlined by brown stitching; the wide belt is of brown suede covered by a coarse grege net, while over each shoulder are rows of scarlet stitching. The scarf of diagonal woolen is brown and buttons at back.

A suit of white cotton pique has a faconne design of black specks between fine honeycomb ribs. The blouse is white lawn and the girdle illustrates a style feature of the season, being wide and colorful, of cotton printed in red and navy on white.

The next to last frock has its top made of a large square printed in blue dots on a white ground. This dress is of linen-like cotton and is accompanied by sandals of heavier white linen.

A loose hopsacking fabric in string color, said to have straw in it, is trimmed on the sleeves by self rolls and the belt is similarly made and buckled with brown and beige galalith. It is accompanied by a jacket-like blouse of paler peau d'ange which tucks into the skirt, the top of which is finished by a bright red crocheted wool band to match the crocheted scarf which holds the front of the blouse together.

Cleaning Up Gloves Are Of Canvas

By DARE.

NEW YORK, April 9.—Spring housecleaning is as obsolete as the bustle, what with vacuum cleaners and whatnots at hand, and every lovely lady keeping her house so-o-o-o-o clean that there simply isn't any extra cleaning to do at any particular time of year! Sister Dionne is waiting patiently for some one to invent something as practical as the vacuum cleaner, that will scrub kitchen floors, wipe them dry, wax them, and hang itself up to dry—meanwhile she has discovered that a famous mail order house sells canvas gloves for 5 cents a pair, and she gets 10 cents' worth a day!

Well, ennyhoooooo, it's spring, and while a millyun birds don't sing at Dawn Mirage (that's the ranch where your Dah-ray has gone native, you know), a millyun desert wildflowers are out, and I can hardly sit still long enough to draw and write. But I thought you might like to know a couple of housekeeping tricks Dionne and I have invented, as well as how a lovely lady does her spring housecleaning.

Firstly, there were the canvas gloves. No foolin,' you simply can't imagine what a find these were, and at that price. Dionne and I wear 'em for simply everything. For sweeping, dusting, waxing, any house or garden thing at all. They fit, too, loosely enough for finger work, tightly enough not to be bulky. And I have a couple of larger pairs, so I can put on my rubber gloves, with lots 'n' lots of cold cream inside them, then put the canvas gloves over them. That's two timing beauty, what?

Cutting Vegetables.

For cutting vegetables we did a little "finger work" and cut ten fingers out of a perfectly good pair of rubber gloves—and wear just the thumb finger and the index finger when peeling the vegetables! They are the fingers that get cut with the knife, you see, and the vegetable stains get under the skin and are hard to remove. And then, if I must break down and confess it, washing dishes with rubber gloves on is a bit awkward—but on go those gloves when the pots and pans come along, always. And with a hand lotion in them, which draws out the greasy dishwater feeling and odor, while you are finishing the dishes, meaning the pots and pans, of course.

Then to our linoleums. This being the country, we have the worst time getting this linoleum business settled. It just got to where we were faced with a choice of either asking our friends to remove their boots and walk in stocking feet, Japanese style, or climb in the windows. Until I decided to order some more squares of linoleum, one to put before each door, another before the sink and the washbowl—and to wax the linoleum. Result? Unalloyed hospitality, clean floors much longer and the little hunks so-o-o-o-o easy to wash in the sink after evening dishes—dry and clean in the morning!

Use for Matting Rugs.

Our windows have it. This is the prize idea of the year, I'm telling you—whether for a country house or a most gelihilligent house in the city. Matting shades! Yes, matting that you can buy in Chinatown or some department stores and have made into rolling form with a colored binding at each side that is matched with the cords which roll up your shade on two little pulleys. I had the plain matting ones made, and how chic they do look and how cool and dark they do make the sunny rooms of an afternoon! And they don't smell oily, as shades do that are used to shut out the sun. Nor, somehow, do they look the least bit too exotic for a summer home—yet seem to lend a distinction to the house and are certainly "different." Less expensive, I found them, made to order and all, than good standard oiled shades. Their longevity I will have to vouch for later!

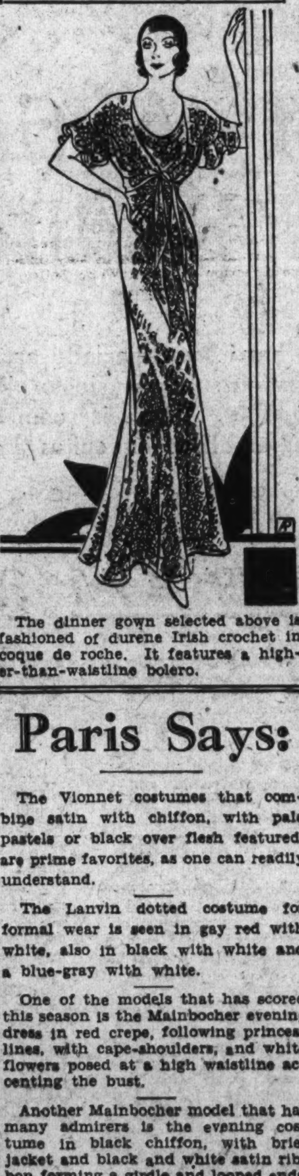
Dinner



The dinner gown selected above is fashioned of durene Irish crochet in coque de roche. It features a higher-than-waistline bolero.

Paris Says:

The Vionnet costumes that combine satin with chiffon, with pale pastels or black over flesh featured, are prime favorites, as one can readily understand.

The Lanvin dotted costume for formal wear is seen in gay red with white, also in black with white and a blue-gray with white.

One of the models that has scored this season is the Mainbocher evening dress in red crepe, following princess lines, with cape-shoulders, and white flowers posed at a high waistline accenting the bust.

Another Mainbocher model that has many admirers is the evening costume in black chiffon, with brief jacket and black and white satin ribbon forming a girdle and looped ends, also a collar for the frothy jacket.

Daytime dresses with cape-sleeves are noted more and more in collections, in plain and printed crepes, the sleeves extending to the elbows and sometimes forming a part of the bodice, while others are merely flaring cape-sections.

The sleeve that may be worn long or short is promoted generally in daytime and afternoon fashions, done in prints and in combinations of chiffon and lace, the sleeve being bloused gracefully over the elbow, or easily bloused at the wristline.

Percale is among the old-fashioned cottons attracting the attention of fashion. It is not only approved in prints of calico and chintz character, but also plain. The unusual is achieved in the indorsement of solid-colored percale for formal wear.

Ginghams are steadily increasing in importance. Plaids have been wholeheartedly accepted for blouses and guimpes of girlish type to be worn with suits or suspended skirts. This pattern is also appearing in young girl's two-piece frocks.

Checked and plaided taffetas are among the latest novelty silks to be featured in dress-goods departments.

Blue Chiffon Frock Worn by Mrs. Barbour

(Associated Press.)

Mrs. Henry E. Barbour, wife of the representative from California, is wearing a dinner dress of delft blue chiffon with lace jacket to match and blue moire slippers.

Plaid Bows Very New And Smart

CHICAGO, April 9 (A.P.).—Scarfs in silk are the thing this spring in accessories but there is a 1932 air about them and the novel ways in which they are worn. They are intended to be decorative essentials to the costume; not a colorful afterthought. Stiff rakish plaid bows or ties are very new and smart. They give a perky high note of color to tailored collarless suits and coats and the coat-frocks, especially in dark blue. The scarfs are generally lined and short.

Polka dots, all sizes, are a favored design. Stripes—vertical, diagonal, and horizontal—also have fashion's decided approval as have scarfs of solid colors. Then there are many new designs both floral and geometrical. They come in all sizes from long to very short and from squares to moderately narrow scarfs.

But the cardinal principle is that the scarfs must be gay and vivid. Red and white is one of the most popular color combinations right now. As for ways to wear them:

Bows are in strong. They may be worn on either side, in back or in front. Long unlined scarfs may be tied in loose floppy bows to one side or in front. Also the scarf may be tied in one loop instead of a completed bow. In the latter case the scarf is generally knotted close to the throat.

Of course there is the Ascot style as good as ever, and then there is the sore throat style—a gay kerchief, close to the throat and knotted in back. With coats or suit with wide lapels that button over, one way of wearing long pliable scarfs is to tie a bow at the throat, tuck the ends under the lapel and let them come out further down.

And there are new versions of the scarf vest. These have Peter Pan collars, eliminating the knot at the back of the neck and the scarf ends that tied in the back at the waistline have been trimmed down.

New Evening Gowns Cover the Shoulders

Paris (A.P.).—Covered shoulders are the essence of chic in this spring's evening gowns. While bare backs are still in, bare shoulders are out, and many of the most elaborate models display a covered broadened shoulder line.

A wide draped fichu running from shoulder to waist is one means of attaining the covered shoulder; another is the handkerchief scarf draped over the shoulders and a third is a cap sleeve.

Pastel Frocks Trimmed With Splashes of Black

Paris (A.P.).—Parisian designers are trimming pastel tinted crepe frocks with splashes of black for chic. One smart model of soft yellow crepe has a yoke and long bishop sleeves of black crepe.

Another of apricot-rose has a pointed waist section of black marocain. Black belts are another smart accent which are seen on pastel frocks.

Duchesse Adopts Vogue for Prints

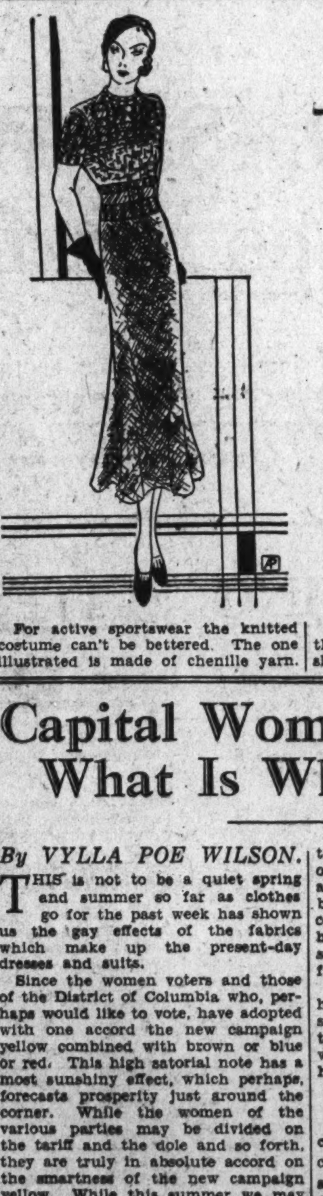
Paris (A.P.).—The Duchesse de la Rochefoucauld is among Parisians who have already adopted the spring vogue for prints.

At a recent tea which she gave the duchesse received in a frock of white georgette closely sprinkled with dull red leaves, made with a full skirt and bishop sleeves. With it she wore matching dull red kid slippers.

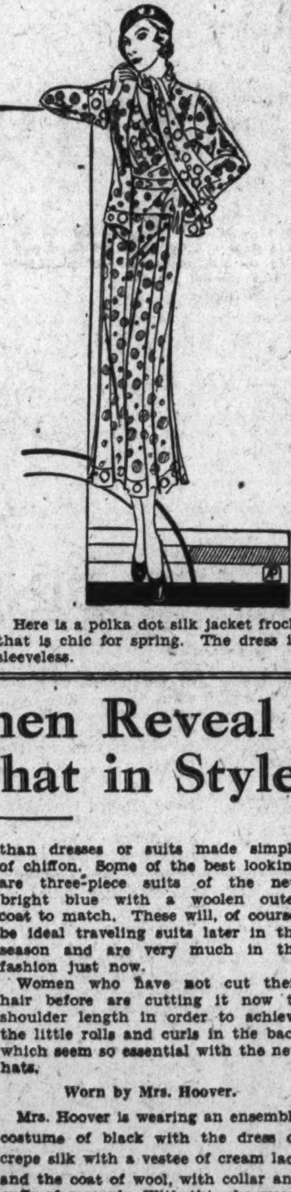
"Sensible" Heels on Walking Sandal.

New York, April 9 (A.P.).—A new walking sandal with shapely, but "sensible" heels is made of brown patent leather. It has a single strap with a tiny buckle across the instep and features new cut-out effects.

Newest in Spring Fashions



For active sportswear the knitted costume can't be bettered. The one illustrated is made of chenille yarn.



Here is a polka dot silk jacket frock that is chic for spring. The dress is sleeveless.

Capital Women Reveal What Is What in Style

By VYLLA POE WILSON.

THIS is not to be a quiet spring and summer so far as clothes go for the past week has shown us the gay effects of the fabrics which make up the present-day dresses and suits.

Since the women voters and those of the District of Columbia who, perhaps would like to vote, have adopted with one accord the new campaign yellow combined with brown or blue or red. This high satorial note has a most sunshiny effect, which perhaps, forecasts prosperity just around the corner. While the women of the various parties may be divided on the tariff and the dole and so forth, they are truly in absolute accord on the smartness of the new campaign yellow. While this summer we may of course see whole dresses and suits of this unusual, but surprisingly becoming tone, just now the woman of fashion is using the new mode in gay scarfs, the vestees of tailored suits and in the facings of silk coat dresses.

The little ruffled taffeta coats and those of transparent velvet which are to go with the summery lace and chiffon evening dresses are chic and becoming in the new sunny yellow.

Yellow bathing suits are no novelty to those who have enjoyed the beaches of the Southern resorts this winter, but the bright brilliant hue is.

In direct contrast with the brightness of the new yellow and the blues and green, are the soft pastel shades which appear in so many lace and chiffon dresses.

White Wash Dresses Appeared.

Whether it is an economy or not, Dame Fashion has put her stamp of approval on the white wash dresses of cotton or linen. There is an allurement on a hot summer's day in a dress freshly laundered and gleaming white and crispy. Many well dressed women, indeed, have not been willing to overlook them in the years when soft silks were considered the smartest summer fabrics.

The old-time flowered organdie and dimity flaunt their simple beauty beside expensive silks and chiffons in many of the local shops. In the category of wash frocks of the spring and summer are the white sprigged net dresses to be worn over satin or taffeta slips.

Another high note of fashion is the stitched chiffon dress and suits. It is cut in strictly tailored fashion and seems to have more "stability" than dresses or suits made simply of chiffon. Some of the best looking are three-piece suits of the new bright blue with a woolen outer coat to match. These will, of course, be ideal traveling suits later in the season and are very much in the fashion just now.

Women who have not cut their hair before are cutting it now to shoulder length in order to achieve the little rolls and curls in the back which seem so essential with the new hats.

Worn by Mrs. Hoover.

Mrs. Hoover is wearing an ensemble costume of black with the dress of crepe silk with a vestee of cream lace and the coat of wool, with collar and cuffs of caracul. With this she wears a smooth black straw hat with a satin bow at one side and having a shallow crown and narrow brim.

Mrs. Walter Edge, wife of the United States Ambassador to France, wore at the Fridac Bazaar, held at Pershing Hall, in Paris, recently, a very smart costume of dark marine blue velvet with a high collar of chinchilla. She wore a small blue hat.

Lady Tyrell, wife of the British Ambassador to France, well known in Washington, wore on the same occasion a dress of black velvet with a coat of the black velvet with silver fox collar and cuffs. Her hat was a small black velvet one.

Mme. Prochnik, wife of the Minister of Austria, had on at a dinner party a dress of white crepe silk made with a square neckline and with a corsage bouquet of bright red velvet roses.

Miss Marian Jardine, daughter of the United States Minister to Egypt, who has been visiting in Washington, had on at a dinner party a dress of black chiffon with a deep flounce of black lace and short cap sleeves of the lace.

Mrs. Henry L. Stimson is wearing a chic evening gown of black chiffon velvet made with a long train faced with silver cloth. This is made with a deep vee neckline with a diamond clip in front.

Mme. Abdullah Entezan, who is visiting in Washington, had on at a luncheon a suit of black cloth, a hat of black straw, with a white ribbon band.

Mrs. Cornelius Vanderbilt, who came to Washington for a visit recently, wore a becoming costume of silver gray. The dress was of crepe silk with a vestee of fine lace.

Paris Makes Long-Limb Togs for U.S.

PARIS, April 9.—The American girl's long legs—"the longest in the world"—have caused this spring's fasion changes, a leading Parisian designer says.

"The long-legged line which marks this spring's togs was created first for the American figure, says Mme. Lyolene. "Waistlines were raised and skirts made close-fitting to give the long slender silhouette it demands. Then shoulders were widened and sleeves cut short to heighten the effect. The result is being adopted by smart women throughout the world."

The American girl's demand for washable summer clothes has been the cause of this season's vogue for cottons, Mme. Lyolene says. The modish American demands an ensemble which is cool and which may be kept crisp, she points out.

The trousered skirt is another evidence of the American girl's fashion demands, stylists say, since her desire for practical sports clothes has increased the popularity of the bifurcated models.

Clean-cut little woolen suits with high-waisted skirts and short blouses, little deeper than a brassiere, are among the outstanding models in this spring's long-legged styles. One of them is designed of dark blue jersey with a hip-length jacket and a skirt having a belt-line 3 inches above the normal waist. Its blouse is a diminutive short-sleeved affair of blue and white checked dimity.

Another is designed of brown jersey, with a high-waisted skirt finished with suspender straps over the shoulders and a blouse of yellow and white striped linen.

Both afternoon and evening frocks, likewise reflect the "long-legged" look. Afternoon frocks of dark crepe are designed with simple skirts having a center panel extending up the blouse and widening at the shoulder line, while evening gowns of a quarelle and bright-hued satins and crepes are designed with high waists and broadened shoulders.

Flapjacks Feature Newest Fashions

Employed as Compacts for Cosmetics, Also as Purses.

New York, April 9 (A.P.).—Flapjacks have entered the fashion parade. There is, for instance, the flapjack compact, a large flat disc of brightly colored enamel that contains lip rouge, face rouge, powder and a mirror. Some of these compacts are enhanced with saucy little scotties of marcasite or metal monograms.

And there is also a pancake purse of pigskin, patent leather or silk crepe, with a nickled frame and two tabs or simulated ivory on either side. It has a lot of neat little compartments inside and it opens out something like an accordion. When closed, it is a trim, flat oblong, nice to carry under the arm.

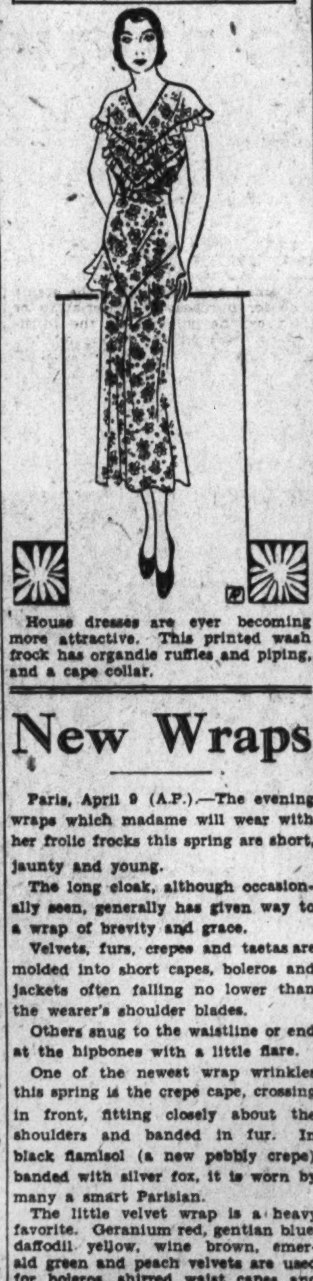
The pancake beret you've heard of for some time, but it is still conspicuously popular this spring and is a fitting finish to the tailored ensemble.

Hats Now Decorated With Tiny Clothespins

New York, April 9 (A.P.).—Clotheslines and corks already had been snatched from the kitchen shelf to serve as decorative belts and buckles on swagger spring costumes. Now the humble clothespin has gone high hat.

Several shops are featuring clothespins of simulated ivory and of other bright colored substances to be snapped on hat brims, or to hold in place folds of the new scarfs. Sometimes three of these in different colors are worn side by side. The clothespins are shaped exactly like their more utilitarian sisters but, naturally, are smaller.

House



House dresses are ever becoming more attractive. This printed wash frock has organdie ruffles and piping, and a cape collar.

New Wraps

Paris, April 9 (A.P.).—The evening wraps which madame will wear with her frolic frocks this spring are short, jaunty and young.

The long cloak, although occasionally seen, generally has given way to a wrap of brevity and grace.

Velvets, furs, crepes and taetas are molded into short capes, boleros and jackets often falling no lower than the wearer's shoulder blades.

Others snug to the waistline or end at the hipbones with a little flare.

One of the newest wrap wrinkles this spring is the crepe cape, crossing in front, fitting closely about the shoulders and banded in fur. In black flamisol (a new pebbly crepe) banded with silver fox, it is worn by many a smart Parisian.

The little velvet wrap is a heavy favorite. Geranium red, gentian blue, daffodil yellow, wine brown, emerald green and peach velvets are used for boleros, shirred waist capes and peplum jackets.

Their sleeves may be long or short, the velvet heavy or light, but their color almost universally contrasts with that of the frock.

Brief capes of sable and ermine are worn by the woman whose bank account is still intact, but many a fascinating novelty is offered for the girl whose elegance must be economical.

There are little silver sequins jackets, shirred peach faille capes and brief boleros of gold taffeta designed with huge elbow puffed sleeves.

Long wraps are also shown for the woman who prefers them.

White, black and colored velvets fitted at the waistline and having gentle fullness in the skirts are designed with short cape sleeves or long, full bishop sleeves.

One of the smartest of these long wraps is a plain gray satin model capped with brilliant red coque feathers on each shoulder.

Zebra Stripes Employed To Brighten Black Gown

New York, April 9 (A.P.).—Black and white zebra stripes are particularly effective in brightening the all-black costume. A tailored tie, or an Ascot scarf, a vestee, or a band around a little sailor of this striped material adds zest to the simplest ensemble. One shop uses the striped silk for the dress of a dress-suit combination. The coat is collarless and straight lined. A striped scarf ties about the throat.

Nautch-Girl Silhouette Is Sensational

By ELEANOR GUNN.

NEW YORK, April 9.—To be completely covered and yet to appear not to be is the problem Paris has undertaken to solve. Some of the new ball gowns have been obviously inspired by bathing suits, which seems fair enough since bathing suits have been inspired by ball dresses time and time again.

Vionnet has created a sensation by the introduction of her Nautch-girl silhouette, a dress with its bodice all but minus except for a brassiere and with its skirt gathered to the naturally placed belt. Extreme though the original unquestionably is, there is every indication that the new silhouette will be widely copied. The sheathlike skirt, fitted like a glove over the figure to the knees, has now a formidable rival in this skirt with raised fullness. The brassiere section of this model is separate and is, like the skirt, of white chiffon embroidered in rhinestones. It is worn over a white satin foundation.

We are far from finished with the white evening gown. Every collection shown here and every smart party attended bears out the truth of this statement. Molyneux has a heavy white crepe frock with a tiny jacket with dolman sleeves which has been a decided success. It has a square decolletage with a cluster of gardenias placed directly center.

White accessories with colored evening dresses, even with highly colored ones, are a new note. Several stunning costumes have also been noted that combined white accessories and a white top with a high black skirt. There is, for instance, a model in heavy crepe with the skirt black, the top white. This costume has been worn with either black or white accessories, but is smarter with the white ones. With a black or colored costume, white satin or crepe slippers, white glace gloves and a white pearl-studded handbag are chic—also a white chiffon handkerchief, pearl necklace and earrings. Gardenias may usually be added with impunity, but their position is important. They are relied on to accent the high waistline.

Hair Is Now Colored To Match Evening Gown

Chicago, April 9 (A.P.).—Powder hair in the modern manner—colored to match the evening gown and enameled (not lacquered) to hold the ends in place—made its debut at the annual Midwest beauty industry show.

As described by E. Rohde, Chicago hairdresser, the colored powder, generally flecked with metalic, is put on the hair when it is waved and set. If the wearer desires two colors, the crests of the waves are tinted with a brush. Then the head is sprayed with an enamel and dried. To get it out a dry-cleaner is used, he said.

Green Is Appearing Fashionable as Color

New York, April 9 (A.P.).—Green in various bright, fresh shades is sprouting out as one of the leading colors of the season. One sees it featured even in bridal trosseaus which heretofore have permitted of only dainty touches of blue. Green lace is used to trim lingerie and green velvet bows are spotted on white satin mules.

It is also a favorite color in children's wear. A mint candy shade is seen frequently in little coats, hats and printed frocks.

Wrist Watches Encased In Wood, Also Clasps

New York, April 9 (A.P.).—Wrist watches are now encased in carved wood attached to narrow strips of braided leather. The clasps are also made of wood.

The course, under direction of Dr. R. Lyman Sexton, faculty medical adviser, was planned as an experiment in health education, aimed at elimination of the common cold in the classroom.

More than 100 students of Southeastern have enrolled. All who walk a total of 200 miles before June 1 will receive an extra credit in physical education and the university letters. CAFRITZ PROJECT VISITED BY MANY Prospective Home Buyers Are Much Attracted to Randolph Place.

Since the first operation in the spring building program of the Cafritz organization was opened two weeks ago at Twenty-third and Randolph place northeast, many prospective home buyers have visited this attractive new development, for the recent growth of the Northeast section in commercial and industrial activities has been accompanied by an increase in population with a demand for attractive homes.

The new Cafritz community offers many advantages in location, design, construction and price. These homes are located just east of Bladensburg road, on Randolph place, one square south of the intersection of Bladensburg road and the New York Avenue boulevard, a wide highway to the center of the city affording easy access to these homes in a minimum of time. The new community adjoins the site of the proposed Arboretum, a park for the scientific cultivation of trees and shrubs under the supervision of the United States Department of Agriculture. When the Cafritz organization completes its program for the development of this 40-acre tract it will add hundreds of charming homes for residents of this section.

Many New Features.

Featuring English and colonial styles of architecture with a wide variation of treatment in pleasing combinations of brick, clapboard, shingle and stucco construction, these detached homes with separate garages are attractively landscaped with evergreens and shrubs. They are full two-story masonry construction with gable roofs and covered concrete front porches. Porch columns are hewed with a rustic effect and a new note has been introduced in many of these homes by the use of wood and steel sash. They are set back on lots 42 feet wide by 95 feet deep and the homes themselves are 22 feet wide by 30 feet deep.

The first floor consists of a large living room with built-in brick and tile wood-burning fireplace with mantle, coat closet, a bright dining room, attractive kitchen in a silver and apple-green color scheme with a pleasing grouping of a green porcelain sink with double drainboard flanked on each side by built-in cabinets for dishes and utensils. There is a window above the sink affording ample light for household tasks. Other kitchen equipment includes a large electric refrigerator and latest model console gas range. All fittings are chromium plated and the floor is covered with inlaid linoleum harmonizing with the general color scheme. There is a small rear porch leading to the rear yard.

Modern Equipment.

The second floor contains three, bright, spacious bedrooms, each of which has a large wardrobe closet. There is a cedar-lined storage closet in the hall. The bath is of two-toned green tile with built-in tub and shower, pedestal lavatory, Venetian mirror and built-in medicine cabinet. All fittings are chromium plated and there is a linen closet in the bath.

The decoration of all rooms features the newest designs in wall paper with unique lighting fixtures harmonizing with the color scheme. Natural trim is used in all rooms except the kitchen and bath. There are hardwood floors throughout, ample floor plugs, radio outlet, screens and weather stripping. An attractive new feature is concealed radiation in which all radiators are placed in covered recesses in the walls, adding to the beauty of the home and affording greater opportunity for furnishing. The concrete cellar contains a most modern heating plant with instantaneous hot water heater, toilet and laundry trays. There is an entrance to the rear yard.

These homes typify the merchandising policy of the Cafritz organization in always giving greater value for the money and mark an outstanding development in luxury and refinement in homes of moderate prices.

The Cafritz organization now has under construction more than 70 new homes in four outstanding communities offering a wide variety of design, construction and price. Its success in building and selling more than 3,000 homes in Washington and its foresight and faith in the growth of the city has prompted the fulfillment of plans for the production of homes keyed to meet conditions of today when the home buyer demands the greatest value for today's dollar.

Property Tax Is Called Heaviest in Country

"The heaviest tax burden in the United States is that of the property tax," Dr. T. S. Adams, chairman of the committee on taxation of President Hoover's Conference on Home Building and Home Ownership states in an article in the April Review of Reviews dealing with the tax burden on real estate as found by studies of his committee.

"Concentration of the property tax upon real estate conforms neither to the law nor to sound economic principles," adds Dr. Adams, who is professor of political economy at Yale.

California Sets New State Health Record

Sacramento (U.P.).—With a death rate of 11.3 per thousand population, California established the best health record in the history of the Nation.

There were 67,513 deaths last year, as compared to 66,178, an increase of only 1,335, despite an estimated gain in population of 200,000, records of the State Department of Public Health show.

The States' death rate has decreased steadily since 1906 when the rate was 14.4 per thousand.

British Milk Industry Plans Big Organization

London (U.P.).—Plans for organizing and developing a £66,000,000 milk industry in England and Wales are under consideration by agricultural interests. If carried through it will be the largest attempt at organizing British agricultural production on a national scale.

At the present time the liquid milk production of England and Wales is valued at about £56,000,000 a year, and butter, cheese and cream are estimated to be worth another £10,000,000.

COLONIAL VILLAGE SITES IN DEMAND

Three Purchasers Will Build in Summer, and Two Will Do So Immediately.

By EDSON W. BRIGGS.

Notwithstanding the general recession in sales as a result of the depression, purchase of property in "The Colonial Village" of Rock Creek Park Estates is progressing in a most satisfactory manner. Since the middle of January, the last dwelling completed in the village, Pemberton Hall, has been sold, three sites have been bought by purchasers who plan to build during he present year, and in addition to this, two sales have been made providing for immediate building. The construction of one of these dwellings, a large New England Colonial type, is now well under way and the other, in the Virginia Colonial Mansion style, will be started in the near future.

This unusual activity during the winter months I attribute primarily to three factors. In the first place, through long and intimate association with the depression many have become more or less reconciled to it and have concluded to make the best of existing circumstances. Secondly, others appreciate the fact that building costs are now lower than they have been in years and that any substantial turn is more likely to be for an increase rather than a further decline, and are therefore wisely taking advantage of the favorable building conditions. In the third place, it is apparent that much of the interest in the "Village" is due to the unique character and historical significance of the development.

Started Last Spring.

This development was started last year during the worst of the depression, much of the time being devoted to the grading, paving and installing of utilities in Plymouth street, the central drive through the village. The site selected is perfectly adapted in atmospheric interest to house the early American settlement. It is a part of the original Rock Creek Park estates comprising over 100 wooded home sites situated on Beach Drive through Rock Creek Park and encompassed by the park.

The building program was inaugurated last year by reproducing the historic Moore House at Yorktown, Va., where Cornwallis met Gen. Washington and signed articles of capitulation. The Moore House was followed by a reproduction of Washington's headquarters at Valley Forge. The entire first floor of this latter dwelling has been furnished and decorated by W. & J. Sloane as a Bicentennial exhibit and is now open for public inspection. The second floor is used temporarily as the office of the developers.

Linked With Colonial History.

The choice of these two dwellings at Valley Forge and Yorktown, as the first to be erected in the Colonial Colony, was particularly appropriate as they are indelibly linked with Colonial history. Both of these replicas have been visited by thousands of people who have expressed not only appreciation for their charm and architectural accuracy, but who have universally commended the entire idea and ideal of the development as a whole. Briefly, the plan is to have at least one or more reproductions of historical Colonial homes from each of the thirteen colonies. The homes chosen for reproduction will be selected from a standpoint of historical interest, architectural merit, and adaptability of the interior to present day living conditions. All other dwellings to be erected, not reproductions, will be true in detail to the architecture of the particular colony or section of which they are representative.

The community will be the first and only collective reproduction of

LANDMARKS IN PERIL IN CHARLESTON, S. C.

Plea Made to Save Historic Monuments in City and Elsewhere.

The American Institute of Architects has issued an appeal for Nation-wide aid in saving America's historic monuments from destruction. The immediate danger spot, according to the institute, is Charleston, S. C., where priceless eighteenth century landmarks are threatened. A fraction of the fortunes yearly squandered on quickly forgotten paintings would conserve for all time structures providing inspiration for centuries to come, declared Robert D. Kohn, president of the institute.

Deploring adherence to merely "fashionable" art, and stressing Charleston's need for help, Mr. Kohn announced the appointment of a committee to devise measures of preservation. This committee, which will work in cooperation with a local committee for the safeguarding of Charleston architecture, is composed as follows:

Franklin O. Adams, Tampa, Fla.; Fiske Kimball, Philadelphia; Alfred L. Kocher, New York; Dean Everett V. Meeks, Yale University; Horace W. Peaslee, Washington; Albert Simons, Charleston. Mr. Kohn, long active in the work of protecting Old Charleston, is a member ex officio.

On Charleston Committee.

Thomas R. Waring, editor of the Charleston Evening Post, is chairman of the Charleston committee. Other members are: Harrison Randolph, president of the College of Charleston; Julian Mitchell president of the South Carolina National Bank; Mrs. Cesare Andreini, Capt. Aeston Deas, U. S. Army; Alfred Huger, attorney, president of the Huguenot Society of South Carolina; E Milby Burton, director of the Charleston Museum.

"There are really splendid eighteenth century houses in Charleston which are in immediate danger of being wrecked or torn apart piecemeal," Mr. Kohn's statement asserted. "A lovely structure, the Manigault House is already neighbored by a brand new and shining gasoline filling station in the best modernistic red, white and blue gasoline style. A visitor to this section is torn between the desire to cry and curse.

"Are we as a people insensitive to worth-while things? We need money to buy food and shelter, but must we become iconoclasts? In one part of Charleston, fortunately, this sort of thing will probably be avoided in the future, for the city has adopted a remarkable, indeed a unique, feature in its new zoning and districting law. In the 'historic section' of Charleston no one may now alter or add to the exterior of a building without having the design for such a change passed on by the zoning commission.

Can Not Do It Alone.

"But quite aside from doing what it can do to protect what is there, Charleston deserves help from the outside to maintain some of its fine old structures for this and future generations to see and admire. They can not do it all alone. There is too much to do. A few years ago the splendid Heyward House, which had been altered into a bake shop, was saved from a worse fate by the joint efforts of Charleston citizens and a few generous outsiders.

"It was saved, but is not yet safe! Its original facade restored and those two rooms which had been changed altered back again, the Heyward House is a sort of museum, but unfortunately there is still a mortgage of $16,000 hanging over its head. The income from visitors would conserve for all time two or three Charleston houses and their gardens, if we adopt some such scheme as that of the Monuments Historique of France. But we must do it ourselves; as individuals we must help. We must not expect a government to do it.

"And unlike the 'fashionable' art products of our day, these Charleston houses would be an inspiration for centuries to come for those who care for evidences of that most gracious period in our culture which reflects itself in our early American architecture. Charleston has done its share in the adoption of the most progressive zoning ordinance in the United States and the continuous sacrifices being made by its citizens in order to save their heritage.

Country Must Join In.

"The rest of the country must now join with it. Here is a chance for even the modestly well-to-do. A few thousand will do so much. The American Institute of Architects hopes to be the medium for spreading information throughout the country as to what can be done. It will gladly recommend particular objectives for financial help. For that reason, too, a small exhibition of photographs of two or three Charleston buildings now in danger is hung in the Octagon, the headquarters of the institute in Washington (built in 1798), and open to visitors in this Washington Bicentenary year."

In the United States, Mr. Kohn pointed out, the Government does not foster the perpetuation of historic monuments as other countries do.

"In France," he continued, "the national government long since established a class of buildings known as historic monuments. Once a building is so designated by the commission on historic monuments, the owners may not change it without consent of the government. The government in return makes itself responsible for keeping the building in reasonable repair.

"It is hardly necessary to tell those who have been down there that certain parts of Charleston have a most delightful atmosphere of mideighteenth century. Sections of the city of this period still remain almost entirely untouched by modern structures.

"For some time now Charleston has attracted people of means from the North. Some have purchased fine old houses, restored them with care and now use them for autumn, winter and spring residences. But, alas, other 'foreigners' are buying parts of houses, rooms, railings, mantels or stairs and shipping them away to be set up in houses or museums.

"Perhaps this is excusable where the houses are likely to be wrecked anyhow for one reason or another. But it is bad for Charleston in any case. Sometimes these architectural

$300,000 IN LEASES IN NEW BUILDING

American Security Tenants Are Carefully Selected, Agent Reports.

It was announced last week by Terry B. Simms, leasing and managing agent of the new American Security Building, Fifteenth street at Pennsylvania avenue northwest, that leases already secured on this property total more than $300,000.

The American Security Building is being built by the American Security & Trust Co., one of the largest of Washington's financial institutions. Four floors of the building have been occupied by this banking and trust company. A large part of the ground floor of the new building, together with the entire old building, is used as the banking rooms of the institution. The real estate department is located on the ground floor of the new building. The second floor has been given over to the trust department, while the third floor houses other departments of the company. The board room of the institution and the dining room for the officers and employes are on the tenth floor.

It is stated by the rental agent that much care has been used in the selection of the tenants already in the building, and that this policy will be followed in securing additional tenants for the unfilled portion of the building.

Much thought has also been given to the service in the building, with the result, it is claimed, that there are features of the service, seldom found in office buildings.

Among those tenants who have already taken quarters in the building, are many persons and organizations of prominence. A partial list follows:

George P. McCabe; Cuthell, White, Hotchkiss & Mills; Baker, Selby & Ravenel; Fidelity & Casualty Co. of New York; Kix Miller, Baar & Morris; Ruth Hanna McCormick, W. S. DETACHED HOUSES SOUGHT FOR HOMES

Spring Moving Months Show Demand Accelerated for This Type.

Special to The Washington Post.

Chicago, Ill., April 9.—Spring moving days this year will see more families going to live in detached houses, cutting down vacancies in this residential field, the United States Building and Loan League anticipates on the basis of 1931 activities of families changing living quarters. April and May are the big moving months in a majority of cities.

George R. Wootten, Hickory, N. C., member of the League's Home Building and Home Owning committee, points out that the past year of depression has not only seen the one-family home maintaining its popularity, but in some cities an actual increase in occupancy of existing homes is shown by a vacancy survey of the United States Department of Commerce.

Mr. Wootten cites three other reasons for the belief that there will be fewer vacancies in one-family houses after the spring moving days are over.

1. Bargain prices, which last year worked toward the popularity of the owned home, still prevail and in some localities are even more marked as bargains.

2. Building and loan associations reporting to the United States League from four representative States as of March 1 show a decrease of 7.3 per cent or approximately $1,000,000 in real estate holdings during February, reducing the total of such assets in the reporting associations to a mere 1.9 per cent of their total assets as of March 1. These figures show a pick-up in home purchases, the building and loan official points out.

3. The actual preference of families for their own homes is shown by the fact that the value of new one-family houses built last year was 48 per cent of the total dollars spent on residential building in United States. All homes built last year were spoken for from the beginning, Mr. Wootten suggests, since speculative building activities were unthinkable under the 1931 conditions.

"Out of 28 cities reporting vacancies in one-family houses and in apartments to the Department of Commerce, 18 showed the apartment vacancies ranging from four to ten for every one vacancy among one-family houses," said Mr. Wootten. "In every case apartment vacancies were a larger percentage than those in one-family houses. Ten of the 21 cities reporting both 1930 and 1931 vacancy conditions registered decreases of 5 per cent to 1.5 per cent in one-family houses unoccupied at the close of 1931, showing absorption of the desirable homes. The other 11 cities reporting for both years averaged 1.3 per cent increase in such vacancies in 1931, despite the doubling up of families natural in the second and most critical year of the depression. Apartment vacancies in the same eleven cities increased an average of 6.3 per cent over the same priod.

"One-family houses built in 1931 were 56,656, according to Dodge Corporation figures. The value of these homes was $431,867,981, or 48 per cent of the $900,641,500 spent on total new residential buildings last year. This is good evidence that in spite of the lowered business activity, with speculative builders forced out of the field by unpromising conditions, people still wanted their own homes, and where they could finance them, managed to acquire them. Building and loan associations using the amortized mortgage plan for such financing made it possible for a large percentage of these families to move into the homes they wanted."

Building Increase Shown in County

Reports This Year Record Gain Over Corresponding Period of 1931.

An increase in the volume of building construction in suburban Montgomery County above the volume for last year in the corresponding period is shown in the reports of the Montgomery County building inspectors for the first quarter of 1932. Permits were issued for approximately $500,000 in new construction.

Building Inspector J. Fred Imirie stated that prospects are bright for more than $1,500,000 and possibly $2,000,000 in construction for the year, since nine months still remain. Most of the projects for which permits have been issued are for new homes. Inspector Imirie reported that 40 permits in the western suburban district totaled $200,000, an increase of $35,000 above the same period in 1931.

Assistant Building Inspector Martin Iverson, who has charge of the eastern suburban district, reported 62 permits, totaling $299,000, an increase of $85,250. Mr. Iverson's office includes Silver Spring and Takoma Park, while Mr. Imirie has charge of the section which includes Bethesda and Chevy Chase.

historical homes in America. It should serve to further promote the constantly increasing interest in this enduring form of architecture. While it is true that the Colonial home in its strict semblance to early models was rapidly disappearing from American communities, it is equally true that in the entire history of architecture not a single American builder has improved upon the original conception of the "Colonial Home Idea" as expressed in its undeniable charm and grace of line. Entirely lacking in complexity, the basis of Colonial architecture is simplicity and well-proportioned dignity. The symmetry of design eliminating many obstacles to building, insures to the owner a maximum of space for the amount expended and offers more distinct advantages for quiet living comfort than any other form of architecture.

Refrigerator Sales Campaign Planned

Plans are being made by the National Electrical Supply Co., agents for General Electric refrigerators here, to play an active part in the May refrigerator sales campaign of the Electric Refrigeration Bureau of the National Electric Light Association, during which it is expected more than 200,000 refrigerators will be sold. This number is about 20 per cent of the Nation's sales quota for 1932.

Announcement of the plans were made last week by C. L. McCrea, of the National Electrical Supply Co. Officials of the refrigeration bureau of the National Electric Light Association have announced a Nation-wide advertising campaign to begin late this month and continue through May, Mr. McCrea said. In connection with this program, which calls for the almost exclusive use of newspapers, Mr. McCrea declared, the General Electric refrigeration department has announced that it, too, will spend hundreds of thousands of dollars in newspaper advertising during this period.

Although the sales drive will not be operated as a contest among salesmen or distributors or dealers, special awards will be made to sales representatives doing outstanding jobs during the month. The National Electrical Supply Co. now is participating in a sales drive known as the Monitor Top War Campaign, which ends May 31. Assisted by increased newspaper advertising by the General Electric Co., and the National Electric Light Association, fragments are reerected elsewhere in entirely incongruous surroundings.

"Appeal may justly be made in such a cause to the country at large. We are not pleading for the sake of Charleston, but because the whole country would be the loser if these buildings were destroyed. Hundreds of thousands are spent annually for paintings, only to have them buried with thousands of other pictures in those catacombs of all arts—our over-large museums. Sometimes these are good pictures and are so exhibited that a discerning person can get something out of them.

"But over a hundred thousand dollars was paid recently for a picture now hanging in one of our greatest museums, an entirely ephemeral art of a pet artist recently deceased, which picture, I dare to predict, will not be looked at by any discriminating person 20 years hence.

"Consider the Grande Place in Brussels. The owners of the many private buildings facing three sides of this square, the fourth being occupied by the City Hall, may do anything they please with the inside of the structure, but the exteriors may not be altered, and the government makes itself responsible for their maintenance, even replacing gold leaf on the many carved ornaments.

"In this country we can not even imagine the Federal Government showing such an interest in architectural monuments. In various localities historical societies have secured fine old buildings, either by gift or purchase, and are maintaining them. An admirable job of this kind is being done, for instance, by the Society for the Preservation of New England antiquities, with its dozen or more properties. Much has been written about the Wayside Inn purchased by Mr. Ford to be preserved as a museum of its period.

"A notable case of restoration or rebuilding has been done at Williamsburg, Va., through the munificence of Mr. Rockefeller. But there are other precious buildings in many different sections of the United States which are neglected. Here and there we find a group of valiant citizens trying to protect such fine old buildings from the wreckers. Savannah, Ga., is interested in preserving its old buildings and is trying to get a zoning law which will protect the neighborhood of such structures from the invasion of inharmonious buildings.

"With the assistance of its architects, New Orleans has done much to preserve one of its notable squares and certain of its historic buildings in the French quarter. A few years ago the Institute of Architects was made the custodian of a fine old plantation house and its grounds bordering the Mississippi in Louisiana. Charleston, S. C., is the place which right now needs most the help of the public."

MODEL APARTMENTS HAVE PHONE SERVICE

First Installation of Kind at Woodward & Lothrop's Portrays Types.

Telephone service in the model apartments displayed by the Woodward & Lothrop Co.'s house furnishing service department on the sixth floor of the store is something new. Arrangements were made by the telephone company to install dial instruments in each of the two apartments. The telephones are connected with the company's official exchange and a card near each instrument reads: "Are you providing the newest in telephone equipment? For further information, dial 2375 from this telephone."

This is the first installation of working telephones in an arrangement of this kind in model apartments ever installed in Washington, officials of the Chesapeake & Potomac Telephone Co. state.

Visitors to the model apartments who are interested in the various types of telephone equipment displayed reach a member of the telephone company's sales force by dialing the number indicated. The salesman gives definite information on the questions asked and arranges for the installation of service or makes an appointment to show the potential customer other types of equipment and to explain the various classes of service furnished by the company.

Two model apartments are displayed. In the 5-room apartment, which is the larger of the two, a telephone has been installed in a permanent location in the kitchen. Two jacks for the use of portable telephones in either location have been installed in the sun room. Portable handset type telephones are provided for this use. In the bedroom on a stand between twin beds is a gold hand set.

The smaller apartment consists of a living room, bedroom and combined kitchen-breakfast nook. There is, in the breakfast nook, one of the new "hand-up" type of hand sets, which may so conveniently be placed on the wall of a kitchen or breakfast nook. In addition there are two outlets for the use of a portable hand set in the bedroom.

The model apartments have been visited by from 50 to 100 people each day during the time they have been in operation, according to Woodward & Lothrop house furnishing service officials. Each apartment is fully equipped with attractive furnishings which are changed periodically. The furniture and other accessories are specifically priced so that potential customers may know just what the furnishings of such an apartment will cost.

WATSON-LUCE BILL PASSAGE IS URGED

Reconstruction Finance Corporation Unable to Aid Home Owners.

A statement by Gen. Charles G. Dawes, president of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, that the corporation is powerless to aid home financing makes clear the need for immediate passage of the Watson-Luce bill providing for the establishment of 12 Federal Home Loan Banks. This, the National Association of Real Estate Boards points out at the conclusion of public hearings on the bill which have been going on before a special subcommittee of the House.

The bill, an integral part of President Hoover's reconstruction plan, would give home mortgage institutions their own independent credit structure to be paid for by themselves.

Gen. Dawes, testifying at length before the subcommittee in executive sessions immediately following the close of the public hearings, indorsed the proposed home loan bank bill, and urged its adoption. His statement is of the greatest importance in view of the fact that opponents of the new discount plan have repeatedly admitted the need for emergency action to unfreeze mortgage-making institutions and support home mortgage credit, but have consistently raised the cry that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation should and could do the whole job of emergency credit relief.

Bankers Ask Action.

The American Bankers Association, in particular, through its interim committee of six members, has asked that action on the home loan bank bill, as specific relief to the small home owner, be postponed until such time as it could be seen what effect the Reconstruction Finance Corporation might have on the general situation.

The present statement of Gen. Dawes is the more conclusive since it comes after the corporation has had two months of actual operation in which to begin classification of the deluge of applications for loans known to have been poured upon it by every type of business, among which are requests running into the millions from railroads and other giant industries, for whose relief the potential $2,000,000,000 Reconstruction Finance Corporation Fund was primarily created.

House hearings on the bill were opened March 16, and continued through March 30. Senate hearings were held in February.

State Laws Under Study.

Representative Michael K. Reilly, of Fond du Lac, Wis., chairman of the subcommittee of the House banking committee which conducted the hearings, announced March 30, that the subcommittee in executive session would study present State laws on assignability and negotiability of mortgages, and purchase of stocks as now permitted to mortgage lending institutions. In the executive session, he said, the subcommittee would try to reach a conclusion on the question of participation which would be possible under the law in the proposed system.

Representative Steagall, chairman of the House banking committee, following a conference with President Hoover March 12 in which Representatives Brand (Democrat), Georgia; Strong (Republican, of Kansas, and Luce (Republican), Massachusetts, ranking members of the committee, took part, promised early action by the House upon the completion of the hearings.

President Hoover has sent word to the Capitol that he is extremely anxious to have the bill passed.

Real Estate Activity Shows Gain for Month

HOTEL APARTMENTS AT CIRCLE FINISHED

Dupont Structure Gets Final Touches, Making It Rank Among City's Finest.

The Dupont Circle Hotel Apartments announce the final completion of all units in the new, modern triangular structure at Dupont Circle and Connecticut avenue.

This twelve-story building, which towers and dominates every structure in the Dupont Circle area, has incorporated every modern feature for ideal living comfort, combined with many natural advantages foreseen in its original conception.

The structure resembles a huge "V" and its three broad exposures bathe every room with sunlight. There are no "blind" corridors; they, too, are sunlighted, thoroughly ventilated and carpeted for added comfort and quiet.

The apartment units have no waste space. Concealed radiation and a special ventilating system perfect an ideal combination. Woodburning fireplaces, Westinghouse electrical refrigeration, circulating ice water, continuous hot water, full tiled baths with showers and sanitary features built in the general plan provide ideal living accommodations.

Owing to delayed delivery of special equipment a few floors in this new building were not completed until this week. All details are now complete and aside from the spacious lobby and hotel accommodations, a striking feature is the penthouse arrangement on the "upper deck" with drawing room, stateroom and bath, overlooking the city, with an aviation beacon flashing across the sky, which has already become a landmark that easily locates this $3,000,000 apartment project.

THE new Silver Star home of L. E. Breuninger & Sons ("at the top of the town" on Morningside Drive) is one of the show places of Washington these days. See it by all means, for it is a veritable exhibition of modern home comfort and luxury.

Colonial in design, the house has been completely furnished by D. S. Pool in keeping with its architecture. The center hall is invitingly hospitable, and from it opens a pine-paneled library, a spacious living room and sunny dining room. The kitchen is the most modern room in the house, with its roomy, silent, economical gas refrigerator and the last word in cooking convenience—one of the convenient and colorful new gas ranges.

Upstairs are three bedrooms and two baths. On the third floor is bedroom, bath and store room. In the basement is a large and brilliantly decorated recreation room—made possible because the automatic gas boiler in an adjoining room is clean, compact and quiet.

An automatic gas water heater completes the all-gas convenience features of the house. GAS, the modern fuel, used throughout this splendid home, makes its convenience as modern as its design and furnishings.

Skilfully designed—beautifully decorated, furnished and landscaped—gas-equipped—completely insulated—here is an ideal home for some fortunate Washington family.

SIBERIA TO GREET TOURISTS OF WORLD

Soviet Will Operate de Luxe Train Through Hitherto Forbidden Land.

For the first time in history travelers may visit Siberian cities and scenes, as they circle the globe in 60 days in a trip that includes Japan, China, Siberia, Moscow, Leningrad, Helsingfors, Stockholm, Copenhagen and Berlin. Also it is the first time in history that a special tourist de luxe train, strictly first class, and made up of Wagon Lit cars, a diner and observation car, has been scheduled on the Trans-Siberian Railroad. In this unusual enterprise, Intourist, Inc. (U. S. representatives of the State Travel Bureau of the U. S. S. R.) announces that it is cooperating with Thomas Cook & Sons, the Dollar Steamship Line, the Great Northern Railroad, the Pennsylvania Railroad, the American Mail Line and the Swedish-American Line. All the booking arrangements will be made by Thomas Cook & Son.

A special train over the Great Northern leaves Chicago on July 6 and carries the special group (limited to 100 members) to Seattle, where a liner of the American Mail will transport them over the Pacific to Japan. Here they will spend ten days visiting the land of ancient customs and modern innovations; and have the chance to see Yokohama, Tokyo, Kioto, Niko and Kobe. Then come ten days in China and Manchuria at famous cities like Shanghai, Peking, Mukden and Harbin.

As the special train leaves the Chinese border the travelers will enter the most eventful period of their world-circling trip. Hitherto one has seen Siberia only from the car window because the station stops are only for a few minutes; the trains run only three times a week. All this will be changed—the special group will follow a schedule that includes stops of from 2 to 7 hours in the important cities of Siberia as well as a series of half-hour stops at picturesque villages and scenes of remarkable beauty. The world's deepest lake, Baikal (over a mile deep), will enchant the travelers for one full day. Here gold hides in the sand and seals bask along the shore.

Extending over one-quarter of the way around the globe, the Trans-Siberian Railroad will speed the group toward the Soviet Union in Europe, and then three days will be spent in Moscow, city of intense activity, new building and social planning, and amazing theaters, and with two days in Leningrad, city of ancient palaces and the nerve center of Soviet industry.

Debaters to Close Season on Tuesday

American U. Team to Meet New York U.; Has Not Lost Single Contest.

Undefeated in debate this year, American University's debating team will close its season Tuesday evening, when it meets New York University at Hurst Hall on the campus here.

The A. U. team Tuesday will ocnsist of Robert Marcus, Max Tucker and Arthur Murphy, who will uphold the affirmative of the principal question used this year, "Resolved, That capitalism as a system of economic organization is unsound."

American University has participated this year in eleven intercollegiate debates with a perfect record of no losses, seven victories, and the rest "no-decision" debates. The schools defeated were Swarthmore, Washington and Lee, University of California, Rutgers twice, New York University and Colgate University.

The debating squad has included various combinations of men from the group consisting of W. Earl Masincup, Arthur Murphy, Robert Marcus, Max Tucker, Yule Fisher and Leon Elsberg, under the direction of Donald J. Sherbondy, coach of debates.

Vernon Robbins, of this city has been selected editor of the American Eagle, publication of the College of Liberal Arts, and John Williams also of this city, has been made business manager for the ensuing year, it was announced Thursday night at the annual banquet of the Eagle staff held at Westchester Apartments.

Party Women Plan For Victory Dance

Proceeds From Affair on April 22 Will Go to Democratic Fund.

Members of the District Women's Democratic Army will hold a "victory dance" April 22 at 3300 O street northwest, the proceeds of which will go toward the victory fund campaign of the Democratic party, it was announced last week.

The proposal was explained to members of the Young Democrats' Club by Miss Elizabeth Wheeler, daughter of Senator Wheeler, who was elected corresponding secretary of the club.

Other officers named were: Victor Russell, secretary to Senator Morris Sheppard, president; Miss Caroline Huston Thompson, daughter of Huston Thompson, former Federal Trade Commissioner, first vice president; Philip Field Herrick, second vice president; Miss Lyda Mae Francis, recording secretary, and Carl Schedler, treasurer.

Huguenot Group Meets on Saturday

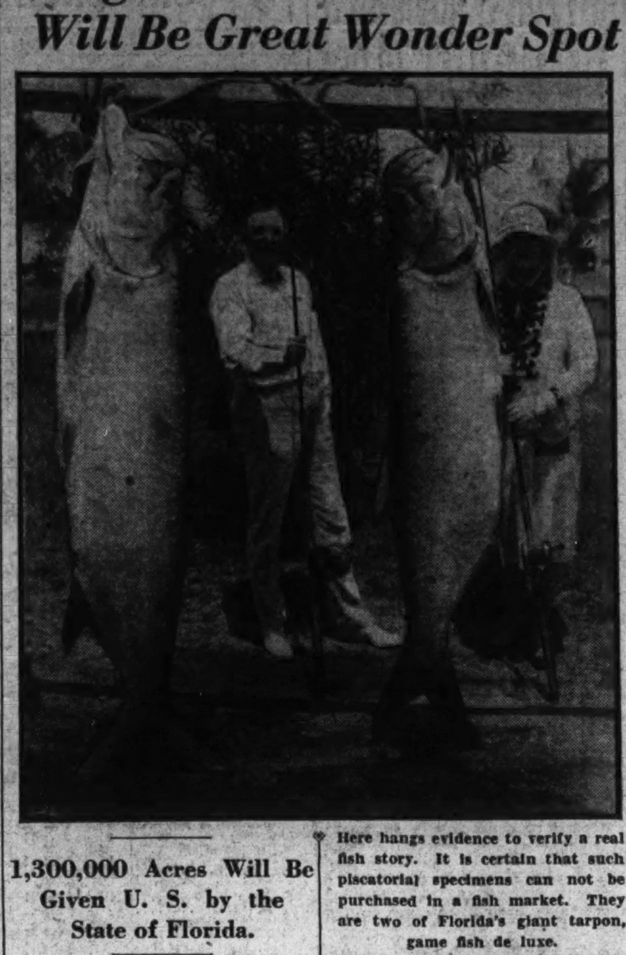
Gen. Pershing and Diplomats Are Listed Among the Speakers.

Plans are rapidly nearing completion for the convention of the Federation of Huguenot Societies in America, to be held at the Mayflower Hotel next Saturday.

Many distinguished guests and speakers are expected to attend. Among them will be Gen. John J. Pershing, the Ambassador of France, the Minister of the Netherlands, and the Minister of the South African Union. Dr. John Baer Stoudt, Huguenot ancestor of George Washington, will speak.

A reception to delegates and members attending the convention will be held at the French Embassy following a business meeting.

Everglades National Park Will Be Great Wonder Spot



Here hangs evidence to verify a real fish story. It is certain that such piscatorial specimens can not be purchased in a fish market. They are two of Florida's giant tarpon, game fish de luxe.

1,300,000 Acres Will Be Given U. S. by the State of Florida.

By WILLIAM C. DEMING.

Where Ponce de Leon sought to find perpetual youth, America is to have a national park of perpetual beauty.

Representative Ruth Bryan Owen's dream of a new playground in southern Florida is soon to be realized. Then the Tropic Everglades National Park will take its place among the wonder spots of America.

Picture the southern tip of Florida, an area containing 2,000 square miles and 1,300,000 acres. Imagine it dotted with crocodiles and orchids, brilliant shellfish and palms, great white birds and Seminole Indians. There you have a mind's eye view of the park, where America will preserve in a vast sanctuary the tropical birds, plants and animals that would otherwise be destroyed by our "advancing civilization."

The park will contain the most southern spot of our mainland and its luxurious trees, mysterious swamps and a fisherman's paradise will make it unique among the pleasure lands of the world.

300,000 Acres Already Owned.

About 300,000 acres are already owned there by the State of Florida and the remainder is in private hands, but will be readily turned over for the park. It is planned that the State of Florida acquire the region and present the whole, without cost or incumbrance, to the United States. The economic value of the area for agriculture is small and it can probably be acquired for a million dollars. For park purposes, it is priceless.

National parks are not new to me. Yellowstone is one of my friendly neighbors and I was intimately familiar with the legislation leading up to the creation of the matchless Grand Teton National Park in Wyoming. Nevertheless, I was not quite prepared for the many thrills I received when I motored from Miami westward across the tip of Florida to Fort Myers and thence north to Sarasota, St. Petersburg and Tampa.

I followed the melodiously named Tamiami Trail, which the reader will recognize as an abridged combination of Tampa and Miami. This splendid highway bisects the proposed Tropic Everglades National Park. During the early morning hours there had been a continuous downpour of rain. Great sheets of precipitation carried in from the sea literally bathed the entire surroundings. The skies cleared at 10 o'clock, however, and the soothing after-effects were a revelation. A tropical rainstorm followed by sunshine awakens vegetable and animal life in the Everglades with startling results.

Like Field of Lilies.

Suddenly there appeared in the distance what looked like a field of lilies. But no, it proved to be a flock of white herons, poking their long necks up out of the marsh grass. They were beautiful and graceful beyond description. Nowhere else in America could such a sight be found.

Along the banks of a roadside canal were rocks, big and little; nearly every one bore some kind of a bird, either sunning itself or watching intently for an unsuspecting fish. Every tree, seemed a bird sanctuary. As we drove along the trail, we recognized the crane, the spoonbill, the swallow-tailed kite, the blue heron, the great white heron, the egret, the hawk and the cormorant. These members of the feathered tribe did not confine themselves to the ground, but filled the pine and cypress trees, singing and chanting their love songs in a language which only birds understand.

In addition to the myriads of birds, the park area lives up to its tropical reputation by harboring a whole host of interesting animals. Among them are friendly playmates, like the alligators and crocodiles, as well as deer, panther, wild cats and Florida bears. Chameleons add a picturesque touch to the scene.

Snails Are Remarkable.

When Representative Owen wants to show some stranger at a distance something of the marvelous wild life there, she can not conveniently ship him a crocodile or even panther, but she can present him with a Florida snail. These animals are remarkable not only because they climb trees, but because they rival the rainbow in the beauty of their coloring. Many of them adapt their coloring to their environment. One of the most unique of the objects in Representative Owen's Washington office near the National Capitol is her collection of Florida snails, which never fail to attract her callers.

Travelers occasionally imagine that the Everglades are filled with designing crocodiles ready to spring out upon the unwary, and rattlesnakes bent on mischief. Unfortunately for this picturesque idea, the crocodiles are nearing extinction, and, fortunately for the traveler, a snake bite is a novelty. Even the Everglades mosquitoes, though numerous, buzz hospitality and do not carry disease. Disease germs common elsewhere are singularly rare in the park section.

Of especial attraction to many are the park's wonderful fishing grounds. Here are found 400 species of fish, including the much-sought tarpon and sailfish. The fish literally jump out of the roadside canals and from the banks hundreds of anglers, white, black and Indian, cast their lines. The fish are obliging and meet the anglers half-way. Deadly barracuda, marlin, dolphin and shark add to the ambitious angler's excitement.

Tropic Trees Unique.

Even the trees of this tropic region are unique. There are mangroves, pines, cypress, magnolias, ferns and palms. Of the latter, there are some thirteen species. Some one has said that of all the trees of the world, none are more stately than the royal palm, which grows in profusion there. Then there is the coconut palm, which has been termed the queen of the palms, as the royal palm is the king. Altogether, there are at least 400 species of wild trees in the park.

Self-preservation is the first law of life, and even the Florida trees obey the rule. We see the same thing in the pines that bury all that is really essential to existence beneath the ground and fireproof vulnerable parts that might be exposed to forest fires. So, also, the reddish brown cone, padded with thick overlapping plates to which are attached the flowering stem, closes during a forest fire to protect the delicate bud of life.

Of all the trees, none is more interesting than the mangrove. Its relation to the 10,000 or more little islands contiguous to southern Florida is a story in itself. It raises itself high on its roots above the water. There it can breathe, another demonstration of the will of plant life to survive. The mangrove roots actually assist in building up the land. When a tree dies, the under-surface roots do not decay, but form a peat almost as hard as rock, thus adding to the firmness of the previously soft ground.

Formed of Coral.

This building-up process is rivaled by the work of the Florida cockle, coral and shellfish, where, by the accumulation of sediment and the influence of the ages, a soft, white stone has been formed and cemented together in nature's own quarry.

At intervals, along the Tamiami trail are small settlements of Seminole Indians, fishing in dugouts or canoes or plying their trade selling baskets, pottery or beads to tourists. They are an interesting remnant of a once-proud tribe of Georgia and Florida red men, now reduced to little more than 500 souls.

They are still straight and handsome and exceedingly dignified in bearing. Their red-trimmed apparel gives them an individuality and distinction from the somber or highly-decorated reservation Indian of my own State of Wyoming. Long association with the white man has mellowed them in temperament since they seceded from the Creeks and fought Andrew Jackson a century ago.

Indians Are Friendly.

Time changes all things, including the now friendly Seminoles. An observer recently said, "They dress picturesquely. They wander through the glades. They trap fur-bearing animals and shoot alligators for their hides. What more delightful outing could a man and his wife have than to take a camping trip with a couple of Seminoles in their long dugout canoes, wearing their picturesque costumes? Trusty guides are these silent Indians who know the country so well."

And now some of their old hunting grounds are to be retained in their primitive state to give the rest of America a vivid picture of what the country was when Columbus first sailed nearby.

Here is a playground ready and waiting. All it needs is more roads, game protection and Federal supervision. There is no area in the country where road construction can be carried out so easily.

"Putting It Over" Play on Tuesday

Postponed C. E. Drama Is to Be Presented at Pierce Hall.

"Putting It Over," the play which the C. E. Players were forced to postpone December 2, is under way again. It will be presented to the public Tuesday, at Pierce Hall, Fifteenth and Harvard streets.

With the stellar roles being played by Wayne Bobst, Clara Haneke, Ethel Pote, and Wade Robinson, plus the capable and professional direction of Mrs. Elizabeth Gatlin Prichard, this play promises to set a new record for purely amateur performances.

Written by Larry E. Johnson, author of "It's a Wise Child," "Back Seat Drivers," "Sweetwater Trail," and many other plays that have a successful run on Broadway and in stock to their credit, it guarantees absolute satisfaction to all who enjoy amateur performances.

KOBER FOUNDATION SESSION TOMORROW

Dr. Ales Hrdlicka to Speak; Final Prize Debate Is Set for May 5.

Members of the Medical Society of the District of Columbia and others prominent in the medical sciences will meet in Gaston Hall at Georgetown University tomorrow night for the annual program of the George M. Kober Foundation.

The 1932 lecturer is Dr. Ales Hrdlicka, curator of physical anthropology of the Smithsonian Institution. His lecture tomorrow night will be on "Disease, Medicine and Surgery Among the American Aborigines."

The exercises are being held on the eighty-second birthday anniversary of the late Dr. George M. Kober, dean emeritus of medicine and regent of Georgetown, who died last year.

The exercises, at which President Nevils of the university will preside, will be attended also by members of the Anthropological Association of Washington. Dr. Hrdlicka is a member of that body as well as of the Medical Society of the District, which selected him as the lecturer for 1932.

The final prize debate at the Georgetown School of Law will be held May 5 between the winners of four preliminary contests. John E. Farrell, of the White Law Club, won the last of the contests. The three previous winners are Al Philip Kane, of the Gould Club; Jack C. Morgan, of the Carroll Club, and Lawrence A. Hince, of the Gould Club. Hince and Kane are District of Columbia students.

Each of the four young men will receive $25 in gold for winning a preliminary contest and the successful finalist will receive $50.

Law Study Is Taken Up by More Women

Percentage of Coeds at National University Is Increasing.

Officials at National University refrain from comment on the comparative scholastic ability of men and women law students, but they point significantly to a newly compiled set of law school records as indicating that the percentage increase in the enrollment of "coeds" is gaining steadily and rapidly on masculine rivals who are seeking careers before the bar.

Although men students will remain numerically supreme at the National Law School for years to come, statistics covering a 13-year period since the first women entered the school in 1918, show that it is only a matter of patient waiting before the men will be in a minority if the present rate of gain continues without interruption. For the 1931-32 enrollment the women students at the law school increased by 21.7 per cent, compared with 7.5 per cent for the men.

Arguments that the business depression necessarily explains the lower percentage of the men fail to hold good, for this year's enrollment of men students exceeds that of last year and of every year since 1925-6.

Typothetae Meets Here April 28-29

150 Expected for Discussion of Cooperation to Help Trade.

The solution of current trade problems through cooperation will be the theme of the United Typothetae of America midyear meeting scheduled to take place April 28 and 29 at the Willard Hotel. More than 150 of the outstanding men in the printing industry from all sections of the United States and Canada are expected to be present for the meeting, which will be devoted entirely to business sessions, John J. Deviny, of Washington, secretary of the organization, said.

The discussions, which will be led by outstanding members, will deal with the work of the organization locally and internationally, covering various phases of the work and their application to the present needs of industry.

On the afternoon preceding the conference, a special committee, appointed to study the Swope plan and its application to the printing industry, will meet and make a report that will probably form the basis for some discussion during the midyear conference. Following the midyear meeting, the sales club conference is scheduled to convene, it is announced.

The address of welcome will be delivered at the first session by William J. Eynon, president of the Typothetae of Washington.

British Plan Race For Pigeons and Plane

London (U.P.).—A unique race between pigeons and an airplane is to take place here soon.

A secret point is being selected some 60 or 80 miles from Norwich and the birds will be released at the same time as the pilot takes the air.

The airman will "clock in" on arrival at the Airdrome, and the owners of the pigeons will "clock in" in the usual way.

Imaginary Visit to Riviera In Sunny Southern France

Charming Historic Places and Castles, Brilliant Resorts and Cities Such as Marseilles, Dating to 600 B. C., Are in the Picture.

Sunny France with its sunlight, blue skies and perennial flowers has lured many Washingtonians across the Atlantic. After visiting Paris, that supercharmer of cities, they turn southward, where the blue waters of the Mediterranean kneel at the golden hem of La Belle France. I mean that famous playground of the fashionable world, the Riviera.

Here nature and man have successfully produced an earthly paradise.

Along the curving stretch of the Mediterranean coast line extending from Marseilles to Mentone, and from Nice to Mentone, served by roads which are engineering triumphs, are spots so beautiful they defy description. Given such a setting, master organizers of hospitality have made the Riviera what it is.

Carnivals and fetes are here for those who enjoy them and there are yachting and motor boating under perfect conditions. Bathing in the turquoise Mediterranean, or golfing on the emerald fairways, those are but a few of the countless pleasures that charm the visitor with southern France and its perpetual sun.

Marseilles Is Historic.

Marseilles, important Mediterranean port, is a historic and interesting city. It was founded about the year 600 B. C. by Greek settlers and named by them Massilia. It was conquered by Caesar in 49 B. C. After being dominated by various rulers it was incorporated with France in 1792. In the same year it sent a body of Sans-Culottes to Paris, who brought with them Rouget de l'Isles' celebrated war song, "Allons Engant de la Patrie:" This they sang at the attack on the Tuilleries at Paris. The troops being known as the "Batallion de Marseilles," their song was given the name of "La Marseillaise."

There is the thrill of strange ports about Marseilles. As a commercial city it resembles Genoa, which is its greatest rival. The bourse, or exchange, is an interesting building, its facade embellished with a Corinthian porch and a bas-relief by Toussaint. The Muse des Beaux Arts is an extensive collection of pictures, principally French, but including specimens of Flemish, Dutch and Italian schools. Other places of interest are the Cathedral, the Zoological Gardens, the Race Course, Palais de Longchamps, et cetera. If time permits, it is interesting to take a trip by boat to Château d'If, the island immortalized by Dumas in his book, "The Count of Monte Christo."

Spotless Houses in Gardens.

The trip from Marseilles to Nice is about 140 miles and is beautiful. We find white, spotless houses in bowers of red geraniums and wistaria, and on the railway banks we see signs of cactus and palm trees, and the azure blue of the Mediterranean. We pass a number of resorts on this short journey, many of recent date, each boasting a casino and bathing station.

Nice claims history to the Greeks of Phocea as far back as the year 350 B. C., who named their city Nikaia, which means the City of Victory, and commemorates their victory over Ligurians from Italy. Throughout the ages Nice has had a turbulent history, until it was finally annexed to France in 1860.

Nice is an all-year-round resort, due to its delightful, equable climate. There are many attractions for the visitor here, including, of course, a casino.

An interesting way to see the beauty spots along the Riviera is to take an excursion from Nice to Cannes, Grasse and Gorges du Loup, via Cagnes, with its medieval castle, and Venice, where we can taste the nougats made with almonds and honey, for which it is famous. As we near Grasse we find the surrounding country almost one flower-bed which supplies the perfume factory at Grasse. We then return via Cannes, also a charming and popular resort.

On the Road to Mentone.

Now we are traveling on the lovely, winding Grand Corniche road to Mentone, which was at one time a dependency of the Principality of Monaco. We all know of Monte Carlo and its casino, which was built from plans by Charles Garnier, the celebrated architect, who designed the Grand Opera House in Paris.

This tiniest of kingdoms, the Principality of Monaco, governed by the princes of the House of Grimaldi, has an atmosphere of fascination about it. With what glitter diplomatic life functions in this vest pocket country, full of amusing surprises to official-minded Washingtonians. The reigning prince enjoys the full prerogatives of a sovereign over his little nation and exercises his powers in a patriarchal way. The control of the post and customs has been ceded to the republic of France, although the principality has its own mint and issues its own postage stamps. Its revenue is derived solely from the casino, so that taxation is light, and is, in fact, unnecessary.

And now we continue back from Nice, on the lower road via Beaulieu, where lemons, oranges and olives flourish; passing Villefranche, another resort which dates back to the thirteenth century, and was founded by Charles II, King of Sicily.

Ancient Towns Met With.

Yet another section of southern France is justly beloved by Americans, and that is the one in which rise the ancient towns of Carcassonne and Avignon. Imaginary journeys, like the one we are now taking, are as fast as thought, and so, unlike the old man in the song by Nadaud, we shall see Carcassonne!

Carcassonne is like a city in a dream—the 52 towers within the walls of this ancient fortress town gleam today beneath the southern sun as they did in the fifth century.

There is nothing else in Europe quite like Carcassonne, and wandering afoot within its ramparts it is hard to believe that we have not wandered back into the centuries, perhaps 100 years before Julius Caesar praised it as one of the noble cities on his route.

The churches of this fascinating city are beloved by the visitor. The stained glass of the ancient Cathedral of St. Nazaire was long ago removed to the Sainte Chapelle, but Viollet-le-Duc, who loved St. Nazaire and Carcassonne, has restored it and done much to conserve this medieval stronghold. The Cathedral of St. Michel is thirteenth century Gothic, and the Cathedral of St. Vincent is fourteenth and sixteenth century. Our party also visits the museum, which contains remarkable paintings, faience and curiosities, as well as a library decidedly worth seeing.

Old City of Popes.

And now we go on to Avignon, the old city of the popes, whose bridge forms the theme of the old French song, "On the Bridge at Avignon, Avignon, Avignon," do you remember? This city was the papal seat in the fourteenth century, and the papal palace still stands, as does the bridge in the song which our own children still sing as they play. The palace is a gloomy, fortress-like Gothic range of buildings, with endless corridors and staircases and chambers of grim traditions. It was, of course, the seat of the popes in antagonism to the popes in Rome. It is now the seat of an archbishop.

On the north side of the Papal Palace is the Romanesque Cathedral, Notre Dame des Doms, dating from the twelfth century and containing the tombs of Pope John XXII, Benedict XII and several paintings. St. Agricol Church and St. Pierre Church contain good paintings and interesting works of art. Avignon, like Carcassonne, also has Roman ruins, remains and walls in and around the city, and the walls are flanked by 39 towers.

Here Petrarch Saw Laura.

A thought which adds charm to this sacred city is that it was here in Avignon that the great Petrarch first saw his Laura.

Beautiful Carcassonne and Avignon—at last we must leave you—at last bid farewell to these cities which represent mankind's yearning for the unattainable, and yet we will always carry with us something of their dreamlike splendor, their unhurried beauty and ancient tradition.

I hope you have enjoyed this dream visit to France. Next week we shall explore Germany, for, in this most ideal of years to visit Europe, I am attempting to give you informative descriptions of the various cities and countries, to guide you when planning the itinerary of your own trip.

School to Instruct In Refrigeration

Classes Will Be Held Twice a Week by Washington Technical.

A special course in refrigeration servicing is being offered by the Washington Technical School in the Riggs Bank Building at Fourteenth and Park road.

This course is designed to prepare students for service work on the more common types of refrigerators found in the field today.

Theory covering the mechanics, thermodynamics, chemistry and hydraulics of refrigeration is given in the early part of the course. Trouble shooting and repair lectures will be followed by individual work on various units of the more familiar refrigerators.

The service work will be handled by instructors who have been connected with the repair of refrigerators for years. The classes will be held each Tuesday and Thursday evenings at 8 p. m. Visitors are welcome at any of the class meetings.

G. W. U. WILL MARK PAN-AMERICAN DAY

Pi Delta Epsilon Will Act as Host to Fraternity Convention.

The George Washington University will observe Pan-American Day Thursday with an assembly at which Dr. James Brown Scott, of the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace, will be the speaker. Dr. Scott was formerly on the faculty of the university, serving as professor of international law in the university's school of comparative jurisprudence and diplomacy (now the school of government) from 1906 to 1908.

The George Washington University Chapter of Phi Delta Epsilon, professional journalistic fraternity, will act as host to the grand convention of the fraternity convening in Washington Tuesday. Chapters at the University of Maryland and Catholic University are assisting in preparation for the three-day convention.

On Thursday evening the first round of debates in the annual intramural debate contest will take place. The contest is sponsored by the Department of Public Speaking and held under the direction of Delta Sigma Rho, national forensic fraternity. Silver cups will be awarded to the winning men's team and the winning women's team.

BANKERS GO ON VISIT TO CONVENTION SITE

Advance Delegation Is Sent to Hot Springs in Aid of June Session.

By THOMAS M. CAHILL.

The advance party of the District of Columbia Bankers Association is spending the week-end at The Homestead, Hot Springs, Va., making preparations for the fourteenth annual convention of the association there June 9-12. The delegation is headed by Claude H. Woodward, president, Mount Vernon Savings Bank, who is general chairman for the convention.

The trip has been made to enable the chairman and members of the various committees to make arrangements on the spot for the many-sided activities of the coming meeting, which is expected to be one of the most important held in the history of the association. Provision is being made for the transportation of the several hundred delegates expected, their housing, business sessions, entertainment, sports, sightseeing trips and for their return to Washington in time for business on the Monday morning following the convention.

Hot Springs was selected again this year, because of its preference by local bankers. Its seclusion from the many distractions of a city or summer resort make it an ideal place for the serious business of the gathering, while the outdoor surroundings lend themselves admirably to the recreative side of the occasion.

Accompanying Mr. Woodward are C. H. Pope, acting president of the association and vice president of the Munsey Trust Co.; George C. Vass, second vice president of the association and vice president and cashier Riggs National Bank; Frederick H. Cox, chairman transportation committee and cashier Commercial National Bank; Thomas J. Groom, chairman hotel committee and vice president and cashier Bank of Commerce & Savings; Charles H. Doing, chairman program committee and vice president Washington Loan & Trust Co.; Barnum L. Colton, chairman entertainment committee and trust officer District National Bank; Robert H. Lacey, vice chairman sports committee and vice president Columbia National Bank; W. W. Spaid, of W. B. Hibbs & Co.; Robert S. Stunz, vice president Park Savings Bank; R. F. Garrity, of the same bank, and Nathaniel Mountford, a director of the Munsey Trust Co.

The party traveled in a special car, accompanied by James B. Edmunds, assistant general passenger agent, Chesapeake & Ohio Railway Co., who will have charge of the movement of the delegates to and from the convention in June. Upon their return, reports of the committees will be made at the preconvention dinner of the association Tuesday evening at the Columbia Country Club.

RECEIVERSHIP ASKED FOR MATCH CONCERN

Mismanagement Charged in Kreuger Companies; Loss of Millions Claimed.

Wilmington, Del., April 9 (A.P.).—Mismanagement of the affairs of the International Match Corporation and associated companies, by Ivan Kreuger, Swedish capitalist, who recently committed suicide, is alleged in a bill of complaint filed in chancery court today asking for the appointment of receivers for the corporation.

The bill of complaint alleges the mismanagement resulted in a loss to the defendant corporation and associated companies in excess of $250,000,000.

The complainant is Benjamin Potoker, of Newark, N. J., owner of 85 shares of the company's preference stock and a $1,000, 5 per cent sinking fund gold bond.

All the common stock of the company is owned by the Swedish Match Co., which is controlled by Kreuger & Toll Co.

The defendant corporation controls through stock ownership thirteen subsidiaries engaged in the match business and carries on a large amount of the world's match business.

The bill alleges Kreuger was dominant in the management of the corporation's affairs and until his death was president of the defendant corporation, of the Swedish Match Co., and was in control of Kreuger & Toll Co.

The bill sets forth that an investigation of the accounts of the corporation and associated companies showed that, for some years prior to his death, Kreuger mismanaged the affairs of the company and associated companies and converted very large sums of money to his own use.

It was alleged the cash reserves of the International Match Corporation have been depleted and the company is insolvent and has no funds to pay an interest instalment of $1,500,000 on May 1 on its funded debt.

The corporation's funded debt consists of gold debenture bonds amounting to $50,000,000.

French Francs Firm To 3.95 Cents at Close

New York, April 9 (A.P.).—Firmness of the French franc was the chief development in the foreign exchange market today.

After holding around the previous close, franc cables firmed to 3.95 cents in the late trading, a new high for 1932, and a net gain of 1-16.

Gold exports to France for the day amounted to $501,900.

Sterling also improved, rising 1½ cents net to a closing cable rate of $3.79¾. Belgian, Dutch and Swiss rates were about steady.

COTTON'S ADVANCES TRIMMED AT CLOSE

Gains Net 12 to 15 Points on May Contracts at 6.13; Liverpool Sells.

New York, April 9 (A.P.).—A sharp advance in cotton today was followed by partial reactions under realizing and some local selling, but after easing off from 6.20 to 6.06 for May, the market firmed up again on a renewal of trade buying and covering promoted by the firmness of grain and relatively steady Liverpool cables.

May closed at 6.13, with the general market closing steady at net advances of 12 to 15 points.

The opening was very steady at an advance of 15 to 18 points in response to unexpectedly higher Liverpool cables which were followed by buying here through houses with Far Eastern and Continental connections. The early demand also resulted in part from the opening advance in the stock market and the strength of grain. Closing quotations were within 3 or 4 points of the best levels of the day on most of the active positions.

Liverpool cables said that early liquidation and some selling on the improvement in sterling had been absorbed with prices later advancing on covering combined with heavy Bombay and Japanese buying.

Reports of a pessimistic sentiment in Manchester and that mills using Egyptian cotton in Lancashire had decided to curtail their production 20 per cent commencing next Monday appeared to have little effect on the local market.

GLOOM ON EXCHANGE LIFTED IN COVERING

Shorts Buy on Probe News, Giving Market Relief From Declines.

By CLAUDE A. JAGGER.

New York, April 9 (A.P.).—Gloom held unchallenged sway over the securities market this week.

Furthermore, this sovereign's faithful subjects, the bears, provided the only effective buying power, which at times gave the share market respite from the stubborn pressure of discouraged liquidation.

But it was not until the final session of the week, when the unexpected announcement of the start of the Senate investigation of the stock exchange caused a flurry of short covering at the opening, that the market was able to close higher.

Declines Interrupted.

This interrupted a steady succession of declines which had reduced the general level of share prices to a new low for the past decade and had brought corporate bonds down close to the low level reached in the heavy bank selling of last year.

Despite rumors of considerable cautious bear selling, most brokers felt that real liquidation was pouring steadily into the market, and pointed to sharp declines in preferred stock and bonds as evidence of it.

The only tangible reasons advanced for the continued selling were the old ones—flat business, taxation uncertainty, and the generally foggy outlook—but the market had evidently reached a state of such low morale that both good and bad securities were again being liquidated blindly, as investors were apparently willing to believe almost any sort of rumor.

Several quarters welcomed the prospect of the Senate investigation, in the hope that it would bring out the real facts of the situation and tend to squelch vague and harmful rumors. Fresh bear selling of the dollar in Paris, coincident with appearance of a fallacious report of an American bank suspension in a Parisian publication, was particularly irritating to speculative sentiment.

Leaders Review Situation.

Wall street leaders again pointed out that the fundamental improvement of the past few months, particularly in the banking situation, had been almost completely lost sight of. The fact that there has been virtually no seasonal improvement in business this spring, while disappointing, is not far out of line with the more conservative forecasts made at the start of the year, when leading banking quarters were inclined to regard next autumn as the more likely period in which to look for definite signs of a turn in the business cycle.

The price index of 90 representative stocks dropped from 56.4, the closing level of the previous week, to a low of 48.9 on Friday and then recovered 1.2 on Saturday to close at 50.1, making a net loss of 6.3 points for the week. This indicates a shrinkage in the market value of shares listed on the stock exchange of more than $2,000,000,000 during the week.

The price index of 60 corporate bonds was under steady pressure, even losing ground in the final session of the week, and closing at 67.6, off 3.4 from a week previously. The only notable demand in this market was for U. S. Government issues.

Bankers' Acceptances Rates Cut ¼ Per Cent

New York, April 9 (A.P.).—Another reduction of one-fourth of 1 per cent in the bid and asked rates on bankers' acceptances was announced today by leading dealers.

This, like the previous lowering of the rates, is believed designed to money rates and to bring out a bring them in line with open market larger supply of the bills.

SALES ON STOCK EXCHANGE

BOND MARKET SAGS AS TREND BRIGHTENS

Federal Issues Are Strong; Some Corporate Loans Become Firmer.

By VICTOR EUBANK.

New York, April 9 (A.P.).—With demand for United States Government loans continuing strong, the bond market today exhibited a somewhat better tone with a number of corporate issues showing rallying tendencies at times.

Although the pressure lessened somewhat in the brief session, with the utilities displaying the greatest improvement. The average for 60 corporate bonds made another new low for 1932. It was the eighth consecutive day of declining averages.

Most of the Federal issues again advanced to new highs for 1932 and, despite considerable profit taking, the majority of liberties and treasuries managed to close at the upper levels.

American & Foreign Power 5s, recently heavily sold, aided the utilities by snapping back sharply for a gain of 5½ points.

Missouri Pacific third 4s, on the first sale this year, dropped 42½ points.

The industries were inclined to softness.

A rally in German government loans featured the foreign section, reflecting optimism over the Reich election run-off tomorrow.

Curb Trade Mixed.

Sharply defined cross currents appeared in the curb market, giving the price structure an unusually irregular appearance in trading which reached a total of 220,000 shares, the largest for a Saturday since February 13.

Buying was predicated on two major influences, market observers reported, the foremost being a scare thrown into the short interest by announcement that the Senate would begin its investigation of stock market activities next week. The other was belief in the minds of some traders that Friday's fairly heavy selling had marked a "selling climax" which normally should be followed by a rally.

Particularly spirited were the gains in stocks in which fairly substantial short interests have been reported. Electric Bond & Share rallied 1⅛ points to close at 12⅛. The 5 per cent preferred stock ran up 2¼ points to 30¾. Consolidated Gas of Baltimore gained over 4 points, closing at 56.

Liquidation Continues.

Liquidation continued in fairly large volume, however, and not all of the utilities shared in the advance. The Insull Utilities continued to reflect some concern over the Middlewest Utilities financing problem. Commonwealth Edison, despite its satisfactory earnings, which in 1931 were sufficient to cover the common dividend with 25 per cent margin to spare, reacted fractionally.

Fairly widespread selling appeared in preferred stocks, American Gas & Electric preferred reaching 7 points and United Gas preferred declining 1 point.

The oil stocks continued steady to firm despite reports of new obstacles encountered in the efforts to maintain higher crude prices.

Investors' Dollar Buys More Assets This Year

New York, April 9 (A.P.)—The investors' dollar today buys 125 per cent more assets, 132 per cent more surplus and 17.6 per cent more earnings than in 1926, according to an analysis of 30 high grade common stocks, made by the Administrative and Research Corporation, of New York.

THE MARKETS AT A GLANCE

What the Stock Market Did

	Sat.	Fri.
Number of advances	246	72
Number of declines	172	506
Stocks unchanged	178	173
Total issues traded	596	751

Stocks.

Announcement of the Senate's Stock Exchange investigation was a terrific jolt to the shorts and the market recovered generally at the outset. The gains were most notable in those issues known to figure in the largest short commitments.

Bonds.

The list sunk lower for the eighth successive day, but with a slightly better undertone. U. S. Governments, however, moved to new highs for the year.

Curb.

In the largest half-day turnover in two months the list was irregular with trading sentiment divided about evenly between the bulls and bears.

Wheat.

Official reports of tremendous crop damage sent Chicago futures prices up 3 cents.

Cotton.

Trade buying and week-end short covering left the close 12 to 14 points higher.

WALL STREET—AND BEYOND

Markets and Business in Review and Outlook

By LAWRENCE SULLIVAN

An Open Letter to Rudy Vallee.

DEAR RUDY: It was a pretty compliment to your artistry to have the President of the United States express the whim that you might compose a song to pull us all out of the economic muck, but in view of the new disaster which now is upon the country I am writing to suggest, old fellow, that you drop the matter for a time.

Everyone now acknowledges, I believe, that there is no rhyme for "Reconstruction Finance Corporation" or for "Broadening the Federal Reserve Base;" but the greater difficulty of your assignment, as we view it here on the ground, is that there is neither rhyme nor reason in the recent conduct of our honorable Congress.

No one, of course, has time in these crowded days to trace out the full effect of the existing chaotic state of affairs on Capitol Hill, particularly as they bear down on business. But a hasty review of events since about mid-March will show you what I am driving at. A month ago we were coming out of the woods in a most amazing fashion, and there was beginning to appear in the national psychology a spark of hopeful buoyancy. The old American instinct to be up and doing was beginning to reassert itself experimentally in a thousand different ways and in a thousand different places. Time and again in those few weeks one heard the suggestion: "Well, it looks as if we were coming out of the woods at last." The Nation was, as we used to say, snapping out of it. Shell-shocked business confidence was really on the mend.

The Breakdown in the House.

SUDDENLY, out of the cool and clearing skies came the thunderbolt of the tax orgy in the House of Representatives. And, Rudy, you will never know what that cost the good people of the United States. With one nasty cut, it swept away more than six weeks of slow and tedious recovery, wiped out completely the buoyant effects on public confidence so laboriously exerted by the establishment of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, passage of the Glass-Steagall banking bill, the antihoarding campaign, and through the plans of thousands upon thousands of business men everywhere to launch their normal spring campaigns in trade and industry.

The abdication of Congress, its utter flight from a sense of responsibility, the complete rout of rational legislative decorum, left the country bewildered and dismayed, hoisted high once more on the pitchfork of uncertainty.

A few days later one honorable member of the House added to the sweet confusion by beginning to mumble something about "reflation." And, to show you how such things go, it was only a few days more, on Friday, in fact, that the genial and iridescent Pat Harrison, of Mississippi, took up the mad chant, on the floor of the Senate.

That's about the picture as it stands today, old timer, and at the moment the country appears inclined to the view that it would be just as well to jog along for a while with the old songs.

Poor Sportsmanship.

WHEN it was possible to take account of what had happened it was found that the shrinkage of values on the New York Stock Exchange, alone, during March aggregated a little more than $3,000,000,000. And in the first ten days of April the further shrinkage in the same list was $2,000,000,000. These figures are not mere haphazard estimates but are the official computations of the exchange.

But $5,000,000,000 was not half the cost of congressional spree. Cotton has tumbled $3.50 a bale since March 20, and last Friday corn futures at Chicago sold at the lowest prices since 1900. United States Steel, the most powerful stock on the big board in New York, broke its old 1908 low on Wednesday and again on Friday last week. The general list sagged below the bottom of the 1921 trough, for the first time. Sugar quotations have hit new lows five times in New York during the last two weeks and, at Chicago, eggs have registered new lows twice in the same period.

I don't want to bore you with a lot of figures, but the average market value of 90 of the leading stocks in New York at yesterday's close was just $20 below the figure a month ago. This means that every share of every one of the best stock issues in America now is worth $20 less than it was a month ago.

And all this has happened, friend, in the month which saw fewer bank failures in the United States than any month since the big crash in the autumn of 1929; in a month in which normally every factor of national economy conspires to produce a pronounced spring upturn; a month in which people everywhere are impelled by the mysterious but immutable power of the season to grow, to build, to do.

Well, Rudy, the American people have taken it on the chin many times in their glorious history. They seldom wince—and they never cry out. Tomorrow will find them all back at their old stands, working like thunder to bring things together, to enrich their orderly and noble lives, to extend their horizons and to develop their yet unmeasured powers of prosperity and of progress and, before the week is out, like as not, hundreds of thousands will join you, spiritually, in shouting 'till the rafters ring again.

But it was an ugly foul from Congress.

Sincerely yours,

L. S.

Steel Orders Decrease 73,216 Tons in March

New York, April 9 (A.P.).—Unfilled orders of the United States Steel Corporation decreased 73,216 tons in March to a total of 2,472,413 tons a record low since the corporation has been reporting monthly figures. In February there was a decline of 102,521 tons.

Steel operations were disappointing last month, for the industry failed to experience a normal seasonal gain.

In March, 1931, the steel corporation's unfilled tonnage rose 30,136 tons to 3,995,330, but since that month there has been an uninterrupted decline in the monthly figures.

Municipal Financing To Reach $5,906,685

New York, April 9 (A.P.).—New State and municipal financing scheduled for next week by 37 municipalities totals only $5,906,685, as compared with $45,589,223 during the past week, according to the Daily Bond Buyer. The weekly average of new bond offerings for the year to date is $22,064,135.

$501,900 More Gold Is Shipped to France

New York, April 9 (A.P.).—There was an additional small gold shipment to France today, $501,900, making a total of about $11,000,000 exported to that country in the last two days. There were no imports and no change in the earmark account.

STOCK PRICES RALLY ON SHORTS INQUIRY

Early Gains Cut by Losses Before Closing; Sales, 1,145,723 Shares.

By JOHN L. COOLEY.

New York, April 9 (A.P.).—Unexpected news of the Senate banking committee's decision to start its short selling investigation on Monday reversed the stock market's trend today, bringing a rally that provided at least a temporary respite from shrinking value.

Shorts covered briskly at the opening. But it was soon apparent that only the more timid traders had bought, for within a quarter of an hour demand began to subside and prices tapered off. They steadied after about half the early gains of 1 to 5 points had been lost, closing slightly above the lows of that seback for an average advance of a little more than a point.

Sales totaled 1,145,723 shares.

Technical considerations plainly governed the session. With eight successive declines behind it, brokers had felt that the market was entitled to a rebound since seldom does a vigorous reaction go much longer than that without a so-called correction. What the market might have done without benefit of the Washington news was problematical; but brokerage houses discredited the Capital's rumor that a huge "bear raid" had been planned for this morning's session. Nevertheless, the sudden announcement of next week's inquiry was admittedly a surprise, and if it was designed to check the market's fall it served that purpose.

Stocks credited with harboring the largest short positions responded with sharp opening gains. American Telephone shot up 3¾ on a transfer of 5,000 shares; at the close it had lost 2 points of the rise. U. S. Steel rallied 2⅝ and closed 1¼ higher. American Can's advance of 3 was reduced by a third. Westinghouse, Allied Chemical, Consolidated Gas, North American, National Biscuit, New York Central and numerous others back-tracked a point or so from their tops.

Union Pacific, after making a new low, fully recovered.

Standard Oil of California, on an earnings report showing $1.11 a share last year, against $2.93 in 1930, was heavy. DuPont had a late reaction and General Motors was none too vigorous at any time.

Chairmen Named For Credit Session

Leaders Will Address Meeting, April 15, at Business Parley.

Committee chairmen for the conference of the fifth district, National Association of Credit Men, to be held at Wardman Park Hotel April 15, were announced yesterday by President Charles W. Clayton, of the Washington Association of Credit Men, who stated that General Conference Chairman Frank W. White had appointed the following:

John A. Reilly, program committee; R. Jesse Chaney, finance; A. E. Kostulski, entertainment; Mrs. E. J. Hess, reception; Miss F. E. Thompson, registration; Louis M. Hewlett, hotel; Maurice Mazo, autmobile; F. I. Williams, publicity; F. W. Harper, printing. Mr. White has, through his various committees, arranged a very attractive program for the local members and visiting delegates from Baltimore, Richmond, Norfolk, Lynchburg, Roanoke and Charlotte.

The Washington office, acting as host to the delegates for the first time in several years, reports that some very well known men in their respective lines have been secured as speakers for the business conference. There will also be a few short addresses during the evening, the balance of which will be devoted to a dinner dance and various features of entertainment.

WHEAT PRICE RISES ON CROP REDUCTION

Corn Joins Heavy Advance; Federal Report and Loss Cause Upturn.

Chicago, April 9 (A.P.).—In a skyrocket flight, wheat today whirled upward 3½ cents a bushel, with corn following fast.

An astonishing official announcement that the United States winter wheat crop this season had been impaired 319,000,000 bushels as compared with the 1931 harvest led to a buying stampede. Further enlargement of the giant crop loss estimate appeared probable, inasmuch as severely adverse drought conditions have prevailed since the data was gathered on which the Government report depended.

Owing to extensive profit taking, top quotations were not fully maintained, and wheat closed nervous, 2¼ to 2⅞ cents above yesterday's finish. Corn was up 1⅛ to 1⅜ cents; oats, 1¼ to 1⅝ cents, and provisions closed unchanged to a rise of 5 cents.

A startling feature of the Government report, which attracted special notice, was that in the five surplus-producing hard winter wheat States the 1932 expected yield was more than cut in half, totaling only 207,000,000 bushels, against 444,000,000 at harvest last year.

Anticipating the soaring of wheat prices here were sharp upturns in quotations at Liverpool, and significance was also attached to conspicuous foreign buying of Chicago wheat futures. Statements were likewise current that all overnight offerings of wheat for export to Europe had been snapped up.

Despite word of drizzling in some places Southwest, no important drought relief was shown, and throughout the day the market continued chiefly a general purchasing affair.

Grandmother's Kitchen Lost

Warm "Sitting Room" of the Past Disappears.

Extra doorway makes space for closet and table.

By HOPE HAMMOND

(Interior Furnishings Editor, The Woman's Home Companion; written for The Washington Post).

In grandmother's day, many persons worked in the kitchen, and often it was used as the sitting room because it was warm. Nowadays, when food preparation is done by one person, the room should be small. Eight by 12 feet is a good standard, and an oblong room is more economical of space than a square one.

Ideally, a kitchen should be built around the necessary equipment, for then the floor space, windows, doors and other stationary features can be so placed that the space needed for one will not be crowded by the equipment of another.

For kitchen groupings, it will usually be found helpful to make a single decorative unit of such features as the window and the neighboring cupboards. Architects should learn not to provide kitchens with too many doors, which take up wall space needed for other purposes and lead to unnecessary back-and-forth travel.

If a kitchen has an extra doorway, a neat effect can often be obtained by closing it up and turning the space into a shallow closet, with a drop-leaf cover which can be used as a table for breakfasts, ice-box suppers or as an extra work table.

Among Us Motorists

Discussing Those Matters That Concern Us All

By WILLIAM ULLMAN

Back in the automobile shows of 1928 and 1929 when the tide of national prosperity still was on the rise, millions of Americans saw the greatest motor car values ever offered up to that time. Buying was keen and motor car manufacturers were vying with one another as never before to produce automobiles more desirable than the other fellow's. Performance and quality soared and prices were low. Quantity buying existed on a scale that permitted venturing into the field of lavish bargain offerings.

Today hundreds of thousands of cars, the exact duplicates of those exhibited in the auto shows of those two years, are standing around in dealer establishments waiting for their second owners to come along. They are still as large as ever, as comfortable, as fast, as safe, and as economical to a considerable extent. They are not so modern in appearance, nor so clean and bright looking. But to compensate for this, from 70 to 75 per cent of the original price has been erased from the tags they now bear.

What actually is left of these cars? Performance test figures throw some interesting light on those in various price and size classes from the standpoint of the individual who can not afford a new 1932 model, but would like a more modern car than the one he drives.

Here are some actual road performance figures on a car which was enormously popular in 1929 and which delivered for approximately $800; its original maximum speed was advertised to be 70 miles an hour. A used model which was delivered to its first owner in March, 1929, still shows a road speed of 64 miles per hour. The car always has had an excellent reputation for powerful braking. New, it has proved its ability to stop from a speed of 30 m. p. h. within 30 feet. Three years old, it stops from a speed of 25 m. p. h. within 20 feet. No loss of efficiency there.

Gasoline consumption of the car when new was advertised as 18 miles to the gallon. The model tested gives 16 miles. The car always has had fine acceleration and shows no loss of efficiency in this respect. It accelerates from 10 to 30 miles an hour in second gear in 6 2-5 seconds. Oil consumption has increased due to wear, but not enough to make more than $3 difference a year in operating cost between its present condition and when the car was new. And the price has dropped from $800 to $200. The finish on the body of the car still is in good condition, but the hood should be relacquered.

* * * *

In the medium price field, in 1929, the maker of a large six-cylinder model began the year with a car whose performance, always good, was made much better. The car sold in the $1,500 class. It was particularly noteworthy for three things—its speed, acceleration and driving ease. One of these models with approximately 15,000 miles on the speedometer, shows a slump of 10 miles an hour in maximum speed, from 75 to 65. Its brakes, which have not been relined will stop it from 25 miles an hour in 21 feet. Its original gasoline mileage yield, advertised as 15 to the gallon, now is indicated to be around 13. The rate of oil consumption is unchanged and the car always has been recognized as one of the finest performers in its class in this particular respect. Acceleration from 10 to 30 miles an hour in second gear requires but six and three-fifths seconds. In spite of the small decline in performance figures, the price of the car has dropped to $500.

How have the popular-priced cars of three years ago fared in respect to performance? Figures are available for a model which delivered in the $600 class back in 1929. It may now be had as a used car for $150, and that price is for those machines in the best of condition.

The speed of the car originally was advertised at a 60-mile-an-hour maximum. On the road the car still is capable of a top speed of 53 miles an hour, although this speed is accompanied by considerable noise. At its cruising speed of between 40 and 45 miles an hour, however, the car is not uncomfortably noisy.

Brake performance, while better than the legal specifications, has slumped. The car today requires 42 feet to stop from a speed of 30 miles an hour. Wear in the engine and drive mechanism has had some adverse effect upon acceleration performance, but the car, a sedan model, still will jump from 10 to 30 miles per hour in eight and three-fifths seconds in second gear.

Oil consumption has increased with an indicated rate, in the engine's present condition, of 1 quart to every 150 miles of average driving. Three years of hard service have dulled the finish of the body to a considerable extent and the hood requires repainting.

* * * *

The writer has run across no figures on performance of 3-year-old models in the luxury class of passenger cars, but those for the roadster model of a powerful eight which sold in the $2,000-$2,500 class indicate excellent staying powers for vehicles in this group.

The only single respect in which the car revealed an appreciable decline in performance was in stopping distances required. Forty-five feet were required to bring it to a halt from a speed of 30 miles an hour. Maximum speed, acceleration, gasoline and oil economy all were of the order when the car was new, indicating excellent maintenance of its original mechanical condition.

Authorities on the mechanics of motor cars readily concede that such figures are no more than a general guide to the used car buyer. They paint a contrast only between what the 1929 model maintained in reasonably good condition will do now and when it was new. Individual cars produced three years ago may fare far worse than the figures illustrated. Fewer, although a goodly number, may do better.

One advantage contained in the figures is that they give the prospective used car buyer an idea of just which aspects of performance he should study when considering the purchase of a second-hand automobile. Without mechanical knowledge, he is left to judge the condition of any car on the basis of what it still will do.

He can start with the assurance that the cars of three or four years ago were excellent performers.

Biologist Against "Fig-Leaf" Talks

London (U.P.).—"Fig-leaf" talks for children are quite useless in these days, according to Prof. Sir Arthur Thomson, biologist.

In the lecture on sex education of the child at the Ladies' Carlton Club, Prof. Thomson lamented the fact that pet rabbits are being replaced by mechanical toys and that the children consider children's garden parties as unspeakably old-fashioned.

"The great difficulty about teaching children," he declared, "is that grown-ups know practically nothing of what the child thinks. Our children are getting farther and farther away from the life of the country, with its every-day education of mating and giving birth."

News and Notes of D. A. R.

C. A. R.

Following closely the suggested outline in the March issue of its magazine for a Founder's Day party, this society met to celebrate the 27th anniversary date—that of April 5— at the home of Maj. and Mrs. William H. Dean, with Miss Rachel Dean on Saturday afternoon, April 2. An unusually entertaining program was given for parents and guests attending, followed by a ceremonial lighting of the birthday cake to commemorate the event, with tea and other refreshments served from the dining room table around which members marched with yellow candles lighted from a taper until all 37 candles were placed on the cake. At the conclusion of this ceremony the poem, "In Memoriam," written by Mrs. Frank Ray, was read by Rachael Dean, while the picture of Mrs. Lothrop, who so dearly loved children, lay beside the lighted cake. A tall loving cup of yellow Killarney roses as a centerpiece and yellow candles added grace to the attractive table and refreshments.

Guests were as follows: Aline, Jacqueline, Ludlow and Mrs. J. Allen, Arlene and Mrs. Appich, William Eels and Mrs. W. C. Betzer, Jane, Helen and Mrs. O. L. Cox, Joyce, Roy and Mrs. R. S. Geiger, Anna and Margaret Mahin, and Mary Elizabeth Hinds, in addition to the hosts, Rachael and Maj. and Mrs. Dean.

America's Creed Day, April 3, shared interest with Founder's Day, and all present repeated the creed, which William Tyler Page wrote. Roy Geiger acted as color bearer, and Ludlow Allen and William Betzer as guards for the salute to the flag. A pageant of history in song was given by six members of the society—the characters represented and enacted by the following: Uncle Sam, William Betzer; Indian Boy, Roy Geiger; Pocahontas, Joyce Geiger; Pilgrim Maid, Helen Cox; Hero of Manila, Anna Mahin; Hostess of Colonial Period, Margaret Mahin. Maj. Dean, who is stationed at Front Royal, Va., where the family will move soon, assisted in taking group pictures of society and characters of the play in costume. Rehearsals of both the folk dance and the song, "Old Glory Goes By," which members will give at the congress, were added features of the afternoon affair.

Girl Homemakers

A short play entitled "Through the Calendar to Mount Vernon" will be given at the Thomson School, Twelfth and L streets, Tuesday night at 8 o'clock, under the direction of Miss Gilbert Cone. The following girls, who are members of the Girls' Club, which is under the auspices of the girl homemakers' committee, D. A. R., will take part:

Jacqueline La Coponpte, Dorothy Hollingsworth, Kathleen Fannin, Margaret Sullivan, Doris Kitchen, Lilly Bonucelli, Mary Fannin, Anita Fadely, Betty Sullivan, Patricia Sullivan, Ruby Fannin, Edith Mae Kitchen, Arlean Shipp, Mildred Kitchen, Liberty Adams and Anna Mae Kirkpatrick.

Miss Beatrice McGlosson, under whose direction the minuet, given in the play, was learned, will give a Spanish dance.

There will be no admission, and as this is the first public appearance of the children it is hoped a large number of D. A. R. members will be present.

Richard Arnold.

The regular April meeting was held at the home of Mrs. William G. Carter, 16 Taylor street, Chevy Chase, Md., with Mrs. Lee R. Pennington, jr., and Mrs. E. E. Dunn, hostesses. Miss Ella Espey, regent, presided.

The meeting was opened with the audible repetition of the Lord's Prayer and the salute to the flag of the United States.

In the absence of Miss Herrington, who was called to her home in Wisconsin, Mrs. Randolph D. Hopkins, a former regent, acted as recording secretary.

Most interesting reports were given by the officers and committee representatives.

Owing to vacancies in the offices of chaplain and registrar, due to the illness of Mrs. Aaron E. Gottshall and Miss Pearl L. Heck, these offices were filled by the unanimous election of Miss Mary S. Belden as chaplain and Mrs. Benjamin Grady as registrar.

The regent announced the planting of 25 memorial trees by D. A. R. chapters of the District to take place on April 15 at Hains Point.

The chapter was honored by the presence of Mrs. Harry Colfax Grove, State regent-elect as guest speaker. She spoke very eloquently of the observance of American's Creed day at the District Building, when there was a presentation of a signed copy of the American's Creed to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, to be hung in the Municipal Building. She read also the senior prize essay on the American's Creed written by Miss Elizabeth C. Jenney, of New Bedford, Mass., a C. A. R. member.

Other guests were Mrs. Caroline Sudler and Miss Caroline Sudler, of Baltimore, Md.

After adjournment the members and guests enjoyed a social hour and refreshments.

Frances Scott

Mrs. Frank B. Bell entertained the Frances Scott Chapter April 5, at her home on Huntington street. A delicious luncheon was served, which was followed by a business meeting.

The regent, Mrs. Arthur Adleman, read the year's report, showing generous contributions made to the activities of the national society.

A motion was carried to dispense with the June luncheon always given by the chapter, the money to be used for Wakefield.

Mrs. E. P. Andrews and Mrs. R. Harvey Sargent read papers on national defense.

Mrs. Alfred Garges read a sketch on the life of Mrs. Francis Glenn Stuart, a real daughter of American Revolution, and grandmother of Mrs. Frank Bell.

Others present were Mrs. Charles Bright, Mrs. E. F. Cassell, Mrs. Warren Emley, Miss Adelaide Emley, Mrs. Chantry Davis, Mrs. Walker Martin, Mrs. U. R. Cole, Mrs. W. L. Hazard, Mrs. F. W. Perkins, Mrs. Amos White, honorary member, who has returned to her home in Michigan, sent a donation for a historical marker.

News Items of W. C. T. U.

Cleveland Park Union.

On Monday, April 4, the Cleveland Park Union enjoyed a record attendance and a delightful luncheon at the home of Mrs. Frederic Newburgh, 3701 Massachusetts avenue northwest. Assisting hostesses were Mrs. Arthur S. Field, Mrs. Walter M. Bane, Mrs. M. C. Mulquin and Miss Kathrina L. Harvey.

Attorney T. B. Jarvis gave a very inspirational talk admonishing all to greater zeal and endeavor. Directors of departments, Mrs. O. G. Christgau, legislation; Mrs. W. J. Peters, flower mission, and Mrs. F. Newburgh, literature, all gave gratifying reports.

Arrangements are being completed for the annual entertainment at the Home for the Incurables to be held April 7, 2 to 4 p. m.

North Star Union.

The North Star Union, W. C. T. U., held the April meeting at the home of Mrs. Augusta George, 7608 Alaska avenue northwest. Mrs. Marie N. Brinley, the president, presided. Meeting opened with the song "America," and salute to the flag. The devotional period was by Mrs. Francis Browne, who used as her subject "Change;" Galatians, sixth chapter, seventh verse: "Be not deceived; God is not mocked, for whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he reap." The object was read by Mrs. Oliver U. Ports, followed by the slogan, "Let us fill our goblet legitimately."

The minutes of the February and march meetings were read by the recording secretary. The treasurer's report was read and approved. The following officers gave reports: Mrs. A. Natalie Desio, corresponding secretary, read several letters which she received during the month. Mrs. A. C. Jordan, third vice president, reported on her work at the Gospel Union Mission. Mrs. Mildred K. Hicks, chairman of Flower Mission, told of the work at the Upshur street hospital, the passing of a large basket of candy Easter eggs among the patients. Mrs. Hicks has accomplished splendid work along this line to these shut-ins. Mrs. J. E. Fowler, Soldiers, Sailors and Marines, deserves a great deal of credit in her untiring efforts among the Walter Reed Hospital patients. So far 176 bags have been made. Mrs. George Bunnell, fourth vice president, made 26 of these cretonne bedside bags. Mrs. Fowler requires more assistance along this line. All ladies who will help please communicate with her at 901 Rittenhouse street northwest.

The president announced a constitutional convention, sponsored by Mrs. Peabody. Mrs. E. E. Norwood, delegate to Allied Temperance Organization, read a letter from Mr. William Rufus Scott, inviting all ladies and their friends to attend the prohibition fair, April 17 to 23, at the Washington Auditorium, beginning at 10 a. m. A moderate admission will be charged and this will include free soft drinks, motion pictures and the right to participate in a number of contests in which cash and other prizes will be given. Mrs. Brinley outlined the plan for local signatures campaign. Your part is to secure promptly at least as many signatures to the petition as you can. Go to any Postal Telegraph Cable Co. The goal is 1,000,000 signatures to the petition of holding an International Congress of Women during the Chicago Exposition, to be held in 1933. The goal should be achieved by May 1, 1931. The guests were introduced, Mrs. McChoncie, of Chapin Union; Mrs. Ayres, Mrs. Ross, Mrs. Newton, Mrs. Anderson, Mrs. West and Mrs. Nevin. Mrs. E. M. Gustafson, chairman of program, introduced the soloist. Mrs. Vera Neely Ross, contralto, accompanied by Mrs. W. L. Evans at the piano, sang in a beautiful manner "Aspiration," by Cox, and "Harmony." Mrs. Gustafson announced the speaker for the May meeting, Dr. Stockdale, and urged all ladies to be present. Due notice of the meeting will be received later.

Mrs. Brinley gave a review of the book, "The Wet Parade," by Upton Sinclair. A rising vote of thanks was given Mrs. Brinley for the excellent and inspirational manner in which she handled this. The new members were introduced, Mrs. Mary E. Nevin, Miss Adelaide H. Rau, Miss Laura E. Tracy, Mrs. A. C. Nothstine, Mrs. Newton M. Simmonds, Miss Emma Guschewsky, Miss Lilly Keim and Mr. Benjamin W. Meeks, honorary. The meeting adjourned and refreshments were served by the following assistant hostesses: Mrs. E. C. Rice, Mrs. R. A. Sands, Mrs. Homer Smith, Mrs. S. McKimmie, Mrs. W. L. Evans and Mrs. T. W. Stanton.

Executive Committee.

A special meeting of the executive committee of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union was held on Wednesday with the president, Mrs. W. H. Wailleigh, presiding.

Mrs. Marie N. Brinley, chairman of the National Council of Women, urged each and every member to sign the petition at the Postal Telegraph office for the Women's Congress.

Mrs. N. M. Pollock was elected to serve on the nominating committee of the Federation of Women's Clubs and Mrs. O. G. Christgau was elected delegate to the annual meeting.

Mrs. E. C. Stanton, chairman of international relations department, announced a meeting on disarmament, to be held at the Belasco Theater on Sunday, April 10, at 3 p.m.

James Frederick Green, who spoke to World Disarmament Conference in Geneva, will be the speaker. Hon. Paul Kvale will preside.

Mrs. Rushmore Patterson will be the speaker at the quarterly convention, which will be held at the National City Christian Church at Thomas Circle on April 20, at 1:30 p. m.

Oldfield Plans Attempt To Set New Speed Mark

Tulsa, Okla. (U.P.).—Barney Oldfield, who back in 1910 set the world automobile speed record at the then unheard of speed of 131 miles an hour, will attempt to set a new record of 300 miles an hour next year, he announced.

Oldfield, now 54 years old, was here with his wife and daughter visiting his sister-in-law, Mrs. S. P. Bobst.

The veteran said he would return to the racing game in an attempt to better the world record of 253 miles an hour, set by Sir Malcolm Campbell, Great Britain. He has set his goal at 300 miles an hour and will make the attempt on the Daytona Beach course.

Oldfield started race driving in 1902. Shortly after the Indianapolis classic in 1916 he retired and has not done much racing since.

WASHINGTON: SUNDAY, APRIL 10, 1932. A

A New Array of Films and Miss Tashman in Person

THE DEVIL YOU SAY, REVIVED POLICIES AND KEEN JUDGMENT

By NELSON B. BELL.

TO THE members of those sects which predicate their orthodoxy upon a rigid adherence to a belief in the unreality of sin, it must be a source of comfort that His Satanic Majesty has so seldom been made a conspicuous figure of drama.

By a slightly bewildering exemplification of man's smug self-complacence, it becomes almost immediately apparent that the modern theater has made many more efforts to personify The Christus than it has to give human embodiment to the Devil. Not quite such a stranger to lyric drama, Mephistopheles remaining one of the imposing undertakings of bassos profundos in grand opera, few instances can be recalled in which imaginative, and perhaps impudent, authors have sought to set the Prince of Evil upon the boards as a character of drama spoken rather than sung.

Molnar will spring to the mind of the seasoned theatergoer as a facile playwright who did it a quarter of a century ago, with strangely contrasting results in the American theater.

Through a defect in the Hungarian copyright law, it will be recalled, two versions of Molnar's "The Devil" found their way simultaneously to the American stage. One translation of the play that had been no less than a sensation in Europe was acquired by David Belasco. Harrison Grey Fiske at the time was an influential member of the Belasco advisory forces. Mr. Fiske, largely as the outgrowth of the succesful operation of the old Manhattan Company, assembled and conducted by his wife, the late Minnie Maddern Fiske, was the fortunate holder of a contract calling for the services of that admirable actor, Mr. George Arliss. The combination was one destined to bring added luster to Molnar's picturesque conception of what the Devil, as a drawing room cynic, might be like.

However, scenting the box-office potentialities of the play and being apprised of the flimsy nature of the protection afforded by the Hungarian copyright laws, that astute Yankee realtor, the late Henry W. Savage, slyly set about a hurried production of the same play with the late Edwin Stevens in the title role.

It is unnecessary here to go into the respective merits of the two productions and performances of the lone attempt that remains vivid in the mind of the playgoer to visualize the overlord of Gehenna further than to say that it is the Arliss interpretation of the role which lingers in memory as one of the most suave and subtle portrayals the annals of the modern stage are able to produce.

The Arliss Devil was a polished and insidious agent of demoralization, easily within the comprehension of any intelligent and discerning patron of the theater, made instinct with life by one of the most distinguished members of Mrs. Fiske's celebrated acting company, which, in addition to herself, had included such incomparable mimes as the late Bruce McRae and Fuller Mellish.

* * * *

Where, may we pause to inquire, may now be found the training school that may reasonably be expected to produce even a remotely comparable counterpart of Mrs. Fiske's famous Manhattan Company? Even had this richly gifted group contributed nothing to the stage beyond its profoundly impressive performance of Ibsen's "Rosmersholm," it still would have merited a permanent place in the theater's archives of superlative achievement.

* * * *

COMES now Mr. Benn W. Levy, under Arch Selwyn's artistic auspices—which is to say that, come Tuesday night, comes Mr. Levy—with a new notion of how the Devil may best be introduced as a member of society in good standing!

Contemplated purely as a library exhibit, without benefit of stage interpretation, Mr. Levy's purpose in penning "The Devil Passes," described with more or less accuracy as a "comedy of life," seems a bit obscure—a defect, no doubt, which will be found to exist only in the dull comprehension of the reader, once the piece is seen upon the boards. Mr. Levy presents his Devil in the garb of a young and fascinating curate, a guest in the home of an English author. The Devil must be no less chagrined than the member of the cloth and the casual observer to find himself disguised in the austere habiliments of a cleric.

That you may understand it a little the better, the prologue and three acts are laid, as intimated, in the home of one D. C. Magnus, a prosperous British author. To the writer's home, where he lives only slightly sub rosa with his young mistress, come others—Dorothy Lister, an actress; Louis Kisch, her painter husband; Cosmo Penny, a somewhat ineffective novelist; the Rev. Herbert Messiter, atheistic vicar of the neighboring church; his wife, Beatrice, and his curate, the Rev. Nicholas Lucy.

Such a party could, I suppose, happen to anybody over a week-end. It is not suggestive of either stirring drama or hilarious comedy—until Mr. Levy, who wrote his first play at 21 and now is only a decade older, takes the puppets in hand to make them do their bit for life and the box-office.

* * * *

It is Mr. Al Spink, another of the articulate and helpful stentors of the drama, who inkles me the ensuing resume of what may be expected to eventuate in the National on Tuesday evening.

* * * *

EVENING finds the assorted group gathered about the fire. The Rev. Nicholas suggests they play the game of Truth. They limit the game; each must answer the simple question: "What do you want most?"

The replies are in character. Kisch wants "to paint beautiful pictures, and then—more beautiful pictures." Dorothy wants applause; specifically she wants the role of Lady Macbeth in a coming production whose cast she can not enter because she is under contract to appear in a young playwright's first offering, a play unlikely to succeed. Penny's wish is a bit more complex; he wants success as a novelist and he feels he would attain it, if only one of his books would be hailed as a masterpiece. Magnus, describing himself as "a professional egotist," insists he wants only to be comfortable. His mistress, Paul, declares she wants love. "The kind the kitchenmaid wants" she adds, "the kind that probably doesn't exist." "The kind that Dante wanted," Magnus suggests. And Mrs. Messiter, wife of the Vicar, wants only to do her duty.

At last they come to the Vicar. He is the most complex of all. Specifically, he wants to become vicar in a nearby, larger parish. He wants it, because it would be a stepping stone to further advancement. Why does he want advancement? We have had an inkling of this in the prologue; now Messiter proclaims his crazed atheism.

"I want to rise in the church," he exclaims. "To rise and rise. I want to be one of its leading dignitaries, perhaps even its chief dignitary. Suppose, only suppose, that from that high pinnacle I could—expose God. What a glorious, cracking, crashing exposure! * * * Wouldn't that set God's institutions tottering?"

First by innuendo, at last by clear allegory, you discover that the Rev. Nicholas Lucy is a personified Satan. Each of the wishes he arranges to grant. To Penny he offers an unknown manuscript by Joseph Conrad; he suggests that the novelist, wishing to gain confidence, issue the book as his own and reap the reward. To Dorothy he points out how she can break her contract for the poor play in which she is to appear and thus gain the role she covets and its attendant fame. To Magnus' young mistress he gives the idyllic love she seeks, proposes marriage. For the vicar he arranges that the bishop of the adjoining diocese shall hear one of Messiter's sermons and consider him for the post he desires.

Each reacts differently. Dorothy, the actress, is tempted but at last refuses to take advantage of the legal loophole in her contract; she thinks of the struggling young playwright and the other members of the cast who would lose out if she should quit. Penny, though tempted also, will not accept the Conrad manuscript.

Messiter delivers his sermon in the bishop's presence. He begins satisfactorily enough, but ends by hysterically denouncing God. He must leave his pulpit. His wife comforts him; they decide to "begin over." The Rev. Nicholas informs him this will not be necessary; the bishop, he says, has decided to give him his coveted posi-

STAR OF LOVE STORY SPEAKS MIND ON LOVE

Dorothy Mackaill, a favorite of Washington screen fans, has the featured role in "Love Affair," this week's attraction at Warner Bros. Metropolitan Theater. The picture is an adaptation of a sensational story by Ursula Parrott, authoress of "Strangers May Kiss" and "Divorcee."

In "Love Affair," Miss Mackaill plays a courageous young woman who tried to play the love game a man's way and as a result almost came to a disastrous end. She discovers that a woman's emotions are not as fickle as a man's, that it is not easy for a woman "to kiss and forget" and that when she falls in love it is a pretty serious matter.

Ursula Parrott, known to millions of readers, is said here to have written a truly important story of modern life and love.

Supporting Miss Mackaill are: Humphrey Bogart, Hale Hamilton, Bradley Page, Astrid Allwyn and Jack Kennedy.

Benn Meroff, popular entertainer, with his band in a new Vitaphone short, "It's a Panic," a screen song reel; a new Screen Souvenir and the latest issue of the Paramount Sound News complete the curent program.

Dorothy Mackaill has no ambitions to become a feminine Nat Goodwin or DeWolf Hopper, or even to rival Peggy Hopkins Joyce in the matrimonial endurance sweepstakes. Nevertheless, Dorothy has had more than her share of romances and rumored engagements. She has also had a fair share of marriages—she divorced Lothar Mendes several years ago, and very recently married Neil Miller, popular radio singer. Dorothy feels she is quite an authority on the moot subject of marriage.

"Simply enough, the first requisite for a happy marriage is love," says she. "Too many people today make light of it * * * talk of it as an old-fashioned sentiment. There are dozens of cases where people marry for convenience—they like each other, they dance well together, they make a good team of bridge, their families approve of each other, they mix in the same social circle, they work in the same establishment or business and a score of similar reasons. All of these establish some basis of compatibility, but none of these is enough. But, two people, who are really in love with each other, will find lasting happiness together."

STRONG ROLE FOR BARBARA IN "SHOPWORN"

Barbara Stanwyck, in what is said to be her most emotional role, in "Shopworn," is the screen star at Warner Bros.' Earle Theater this week, while Moran and Mack, blackface comic favorites of stage, screen and radio fame, and Roy Smeck, wizard of the strings, head the stage portion of the program.

In "Shopworn," Columbia Pictures offers Barbara Stanwyck, as a courageous girl who finds love very often hardens a person. It is safe to prophesy that Miss Stanwyck's role will be one of her best-loved characterizations. It allows her to portray that interesting transition from a sweet, innocent young girl to a disillusioned woman who nearly wrecks her life because of her implacable stoicism.

The supporting cast includes Regis Toomey, ZaSu Pitts, Lucien Littlefield, Clara Blandick and Oscar Apfel.

Moran and Mack, the original "Two Black Crows," will offer a new routine of comedy patter and dialogue. Those who have heard or seen these noted stars need not be told of their infectious drolleries. Roy Smeck, the internationally known wizard of stringed instruments, occupies the second position of importance with his routine of musical novelties. Other acts include the Colby and Murry Revue, the Five Elgins, Europe's latest novelty sensation, and Maxine Doyle, mistress of ceremonies.

Orchestra prelude, a new talkertoon novelty and the latest issue of the Graham McNamee newsreel completes the program.

If ZaSu Pitts had succeeded in following her girlhood ambition, she would now be a detective. The comedienne now appearing in "Shopworn," admitted as much during the filming of the drama.

When she first went to Los Angeles, over a decade ago, she was very young and full of illusions. One of them was that she would make a splendid criminal investigator. ZaSu had read about the exploits of Sherlock Holmes and other prewar detectives, and was convinced that she should make sleuthing her lifework.

Los Angeles, she reasoned, being a large city, should have plenty of crime—much more than Santa Cruz, Calif., her home town. But she soon discovered that while the movie town might be larger, there weren't enough diabolical crimes to make detecting much in demand. Her efforts to get a job with detective agencies were quite unsuccessful—so ZaSu went into the movies.

MISS TASHMAN LAUNCHES NEW POLICY IN PERSON AT RIALTO

There isn't any doubt about Lilyan Tashman.

Audiences at the Rialto Theater are finding her a fascinating lady, one of the true aristocrats of Hollywood and her personal appearance here—one of few she will make anywhere in the country—is proving a sensational success.

Her clothes and her personality combine to make her a real figure, and Rialto audiences are finding her smart, modern, ultra-ultra in matters of chic. Present "in the flesh," Miss Tashman is twice as interesting as on the screen. In fact, Washington knew her "when"—long before her advent into pictures—in the days when she was acquiring experience. That was when George Preston Marshall was a stock impresario at the Belasco Theater.

Her appearance at the Rialto is enhanced by the extra setting provided by Herb Gordon's Whispering Orchestra, which has been playing the season at Wardman Park Hotel. These former Brunswick recording artists are better than ever.

Then, of course, there is "Scandal for Sale," the newspaper picture with Claudia Dell, Pat O'Brien, Charles Bickford and Rose Hobart in the cast.

The program is rounded out by Universal News, with Graham McNamee as the talking reporter, and a special list of shorter subjects.

Under the new Rialto Theater policy, the Gordon Orchestra will remain indefinitely.

MOVING DRAMA IS DISCLOSED IN PICTURE BASED ON FACTS

Choosing Washington for the Eastern premiere, "The Wet Parade" has been opened by M.-G.-M. at Loew's Columbia. It is the screen story of Upton Sinclair's moving novel.

"The Wet Parade" opened in California about two weeks ago at top prices and the Washington showing is the first time that it has been on the screen at popular prices.

The picture embraces one of the best-known casts in present day motion pictures. Walter Huston, Dorothy Jordan, Lewis Stone and Robert Young have leading parts. Others are Jimmy Durante, the great comedian; Neil Hamilton, Wallace Ford, brilliant young English actor; Myrna Loy, John Miljan, Joan Marsh, Ben Alexander and Forrester Harvey.

In no sense is "The Wet Parade" a prohibition play. It is described as one of the most far-reaching and moving dramas of modern America and lays it bare with its good things, its bad, its sincere things and its fallacies.

Lewis Stone and Walter Huston have two of the best characterizations ever to be turned in by Hollywood stars. Both of the parts are virile and alive and have won the plaudits of the critics on the Coast where the movie has played.

Upton Sinclair has long been recognized as one of America's greatest novelists. It is said that he is the most widely read author alive, by European persons.

A VERSATILE COMEDIAN FROM THE CINEMA AT RKO-KEITH'S

Charley Chase, Hal Roach comedy star, is heading the new vaudeville bill at RKO-Keith's. Chase is one of the most versatile of the screen comics, and holds the record for productions in which he has been the starred comedian. He entered the films in 1914 from the vaudeville and musical comedy stages.

His present vaudeville tour of the Radio-Keith-Orpheum theaters is his first in many years, and every report has the comedian providing plenty of laughter and surprises.

In the supporting bill of five acts are the Georgia crackers, Annie, Judy and Zeke, with their mountain songs, native comedy, yodeling and musical instruments; Hal Sherman, another comedy spot for the program, who calls himself "Mr. St. Vitus, Himself;" the De Toregos, in a dance sequence, with two assisting artists; Sally Sarrant and Joe Bradshaw; Allan Correlli, exponent of scientific weight control, and, last but not least, and principally for the children, Kluting's Animal Stars, a group of dogs, cats and pigeons remarkably well trained.

The screen feature brings back to Keith's "Bill" Boyd, who, with Ginger Rogers, Hobart Bosworth, Edgar Kennedy and other prominent players, is appearing in a thrilling story of the Northern woods, "Carnival Boat."

In the picture "Bill" Boyd returns to an old calling by becoming a lumberjack, while Miss Rogers, who reached the screen from the vaudeville stage, sings a number of songs in the role of a player on the showboat from which the picture gets its name.

Peter Laurini, guest conductor, and the Pathe News will round out the program.

When a screen comedian makes a personal appearance and the management of a theater issues the statement that that comedian is the most versatile of all screen comedians, that management must have something to back up such a statement.

RKO-Keith's furnishes the following data to suport the claim made for Charley Chase:

Chase has been in pictures since 1914, a period of eighteen years; he writes his own stories and directs them, and has appeared in so lengthy a list of two-reel comedies, both silent and talking, that to list them would fill a book.

He is not only a comedian, but a musician, too.

He is also a landscape gardener, having planned many of the Hollywood garden spots.

He is one of the few left-handed polo players registered with the U. S. Polo Association. He also is a very proficient ping-pong player.

He was well known as a vaudeville and musical comedy star before entering the pictures.

TWO STARS IN FILM AND NEW PALACE REVUE

"Strangers in Love," a Paramount production, with Fredric March, the star of "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde," and Kay Francis, is the screen offering at Loew's Palace Theater this week. "Forward March," a musical presentation from the Capitol Theater in New York, is on the stage.

March won considerable applause with his dual role in the Robert Louis Stevenson story, and it is such a part that he takes in the new picture. This time he takes the assignment of characterizing twin brothers.

"Strangers in Love" is a romantic comedy, sparkling and witty throughout, and has been described as one of the unique pictures of the current year. It is based on the novel "The Shorn Lamb," by William J. Locke. The screen play is by William Slavens McNutt and Grover Jones. The director is Lothar Mendes.

March enacts the role of a usurping son who forgets a will to deprive a brother of his inheritance, and also the role of an adventuresome vagabond brother who comes into his own after a series of thrilling and romantic episodes.

Others in the cast, beside that stellar star, Kay Francis, are Stuart Erwin, Juliette Compton, George Barbier, Earle Foxe, Lucien Littlefield and John M. Sullivan.

Lucien Littlefield's work again stands out. He was seen recently as the garrulous German notary in "Broken Lullaby." In this picture, he is a dignified professor who becomes involved in a hilarious "scrape."

The stage show features Terrell and Fawcett, two well-known-to Washington-fans comedians. Their act is billed as "A Series of Comical Errors."

The Candreva Brothers, modern trumpeters extraordinary, offer a novelty musical arrangement. There are six of the brothers and each plays a trumpet.

Another unit in this versatile stage offering is Loyalta's Arabian Stallions, a horse act of no mean merit.

The Twelve American Steppers have mastered many clever chorus routines, which they do in military style.

Harry Borjes, conducting the Palace Orchestra, has a special seasonal musical overture.

BAXTER STAR OF A VARIED FOX PROGRAM

The Fox is presenting as its feature picture this week the daddy of "Daddy Long Legs," Warner Baxter, in an even more lovable role in "Amateur Daddy." Opposite Baxter, in the feminine lead, is Marian Nixon.

The story is that of a construction engineer, Baxter, who suddenly finds himself caring for four orphans after a promise to their dying father. He finds himself falling love with the oldest of the waifs (Marian Nixon) and incurring the enmity of the neighboring family, who had attempted to rob the children of their ranch. The plot has a strange and stirring climax.

The supporting cast includes Rita LaRoy, Lucille Powers, William Pawley, David Landau, Clarence Wilson and Frankie Darro.

The story is from the novel "Scotch Valley," by Mildred Cram, and the direction is by John Blystone.

On the stage, Fanchon & Marco are presenting their "Gay Vienna" Idea, staged by Leonidoff. The cast includes Duci de Karekjarto, Gaudsmith Brothers, Rena and Rathburn, Marion Fields, Roy Smoot and the Carla Torney Dancers.

Phil Lampkin is presenting an overture of popular tunes of the day, and with Fox Movietone News completes the program.

Warner Baxter's hardest job is trying to convince acquaintances that he is an American. At first meeting they are invariably astounded to learn that the tanned, wavy-haired star is not a Spaniard, or of some other of the Mediterranean peoples. This is because he has so often portrayed in his screen characterizations men of foreign, especially Latin, extraction.

But the truth is, Baxter was born in Columbus, Ohio, of American parents, and was educated there. Although he dabbled with Spanish while in high school, he does not speak the language fluently, French being his favorite acquired tongue.

In "Amateur Daddy," Baxter has every opportunity to prove his Americanism, even to the most skeptical. As a pipe-smoking, hard-working American construction engineer, he is seen as the typical, kind-hearted bachelor so characteristic of our everyday life.

"The Devil Passes," But Not Until Tuesday Evening!

A STAR CAST IN MR. LEVY'S LATEST PLAY

On next Tuesday night Washington theatergoers will have their first view of Arch Selwyn's all-star cast acting in his presentation of Benn W. Levy's comedy, "The Devil Passes," which comes to the National Theater that night, for an engagement of five days, including the usual Wednesday and Saturday matinees.

This distinguished company includes Arthur Byron, star of "Tea for Three," "The Boomerang," "Bluebeard's Eighth Wife," "Spring Cleaning," "The Criminal Code" and "Five Star Final;" Basil Rathbone, star of "The Swan," "The Grand Duchess and the Waiter," "The Captive," "The Command to Love" and "Melo;" Robert Loraine, star of Shaw's "Man and Superman," "Cyrano de Bergerac," "Mary Rose" and "The Father;" Mary Nash, star of "The Lady," "Captain Applejack," "A Lady's Virtue," "The Man Who Came Back" and "The Command to Love;" Cecilia Loftus, famous mimic, London star of "Peter Pan" and leading lady for Sir Henry Irving and E. H. Sothern; Diana Wynyard, potential English star who reached a stellar rating in London performances of "The Man Who Pays the Piper," "Petticoat Influence" and "Lean Harvest;" Eric Blore, English comedian who made his American debut in "Little Miss Bluebeard," and has acted for the Theater Guild in "Roar China" and "Success," and J. Malcolm Dunn, who after a series of London successes with Marie Tempest and Granville Barker, came to America to act in "White Cargo," "The Great Barrington," "Anna," "Banco" and numerous other plays and pictures.

"The Devil Passes" tells an interesting story of what transpired during a week-end interlude in an author's cottage in a small English town. His satanic majesty, in the form of a young curate, arrives on the scene and proceeds to tempt a group of civilized moderns.

He persuades each member of the company to confess what he really wants and tempts each in turn with the means of achieving his wish, and when they all refuse to resort to deceit to gain their goals, the Devil departs for another province, having proved his point that most blackguards are more God fearing than they think they are when they gather in their blase, cynical and agnostic circles and talk with scorn and contempt.

The production was staged by the author and the settings are by P. Dodd Ackerman.

John Erskine.

John Erskine, the Community Institute's last speaker for this season, in his lecture Tuesday evening (April 12) at Central High Community Center (Thirteenth and Clifton streets northwest) on the subject of "Music in Our Daily Lives" will give some of his own ideas on the importance of musical training for young people, and also, doubtless, a few pungent remarks anent librettos for the modern American operas, as evidenced by his own opera, "Jack and the Beanstalk," a fairy opera for the childlike, which had its premiere the past season at the Juilliard Foundation and School of Music, in New York City.

One of Prof. Erskine's theories about librettos is that "a libretto should be entertaining, and it should be a comedy." His second theory is that a libretto should be based upon a plot already familiar to the audience. "The pleasure of recognition belongs to art," says Prof. Erskine.

Real Music.

Mozart's beautiful "Sonata in D major for two pianos," written nearly 150 years ago, yet mentioned by Willy Rehberg, noted German editor and musical authority, as "the most important and most characteristic composition ever written for two pianos," will be the feature number of the program to be presented Thursday, April 21, in the Willard room of the Hotel Willard by Robert Ruckman and Emerson Meyers, Washington pianists. That evening these talented young pianists are giving an entire program of music either written directly for two pianos, or transcribed for them.

Another particularly interesting work these pianists will play, is Saint-Saens' "Minuet and Gavotte," originally written for sextet (five strings and trumpet), but transcribed by him, himself, for two pianos.

Glee Club.

Among the events of this week will be the annual concert of the Elizabeth Somers Glee Club on Thursday evening, April 14, in Barker Hall, of the Young Women's Christian Association, conducted by Mary M. Burnett, with Sylvia Meyers, harpist of Washington and Baltimore, as guest artist.

This concert by one of the city's best known and most popular organizations is offered as a feature of the post-Easter season, and its program comprises compositions never before sung by the club.

Basil Rathbone, Mary Nash in "The Devil Passes" —National (Tuesday).

A NIGHT CLUB WITH RHYTHM

Pete Macias is one of the "home town boys" who made good in his own city, although his musical talent has carried him everywhere from the vaudeville stage to European dance casinos. Every one knows Pete, and it is his pleasing personality as well as his cordial "hello" to every one that has made him so admired.

In his orchestra at Club Michel Pete has gathered about him a group of most versatile musicians, and it is largely due to him and his band that this night club has scored so rapid a success.

In addition to Pete Macias and the boys, Club Michel also offers each week the finest floor revues south of New York. The two floor shows are presented twice nightly, at midnight and 2 a. m., except Sunday, when dancing is from 9 to 1 a. m.

Never Petted.

A dog who has never been petted by his master is as faithful to him as any dog that ever lived. Such is "Sikh," the pet dog of Randian, famous "human torso" of sideshows, and who is playing a part in "Freaks." The dog worships his armless and legless "boss."

FISK SINGERS TO BE HEARD

The world-famous Fisk Jubilee Singers will render a "Bicentennial Musical" on Friday evening, April 15, at 8:30, in the Washington Auditorium.

Preeminent in the field of ensemble singing, the direct descendants of the original exponents of Negro spirituals, the Fisk Jubilee Singers have become a musical tradition of international significance. In 60 years Fisk University, of Nashville, Tenn., has produced the three finest groups of singers in the Negro race. The present group, a sextet, is the third generation of these singers, which has always been composed of graduates of Fisk University.

The present group has recently made a fourth visit to Europe, which renewed and increased their triumphs in all the important centers. The timbre and quality of their voices individually and the perfection of their ensemble is the constant admiration of eminent musicians, and they are everywhere acknowledged to be the greatest exponents of Negro spirituals in the world today.

In addition to the Fisk Jubilee Singers, George Garner, of Chicago, a tenor of international popularity, and Warner Lawson, of Tennessee, America's most talented young Negro pianist, will be presented.

COMING STAGE ATTRACTIONS

ONE week from tomorrow the National Theater Players will begin their eighth spring and summer season in the National Theater—the opening date, Monday, April 18; the play, "A Church Mouse."

"A Church Mouse," produced by William A. Brady at the Playhouse, in New York, enjoyed a prosperous run. It never came to Washington, and the National Theater Players have the honor of staging its premiere here. The play is admirably fitted to the capabilities of the company. In brief, it is the story of a butterfly who emerges from a caterpillar, a neat little Cinderella-like tale. It was adapted from a Hungarian drama, the adaptation made by Frederic and Fannie Hatton.

The title comes from the fact that the central character of "A Church Mouse" is a plain little stenographer who reveals unexpected charm when dressed for a party. She eventually marries her employer, who happens to be a baron.

A NEW play en route to its New York opening has been booked for a week's engagement at the Belasco Theater beginning Monday evening, April 18. This is the piece called "Another Language," by Rose Franken, which Arthur J. Beckhard is producing with Glenn Anders and Margaret Wycherly in the leading roles.

Having been first tried out last summer in Greenwich, Conn., this play has already passed through one test that indicates its entertainment value for Washington theatergoers as being immediately, on no other evidence, superior to the completely unknown plays that sometimes come here prior to their Broadway openings.

Mr. Anders and Miss Wycherly are both best remembered here for their performances in Theater Guild plays —the former in "They Knew What They Wanted," "Strange Interlude," "Dynamo" and "Tomorrow and Tomorrow,"—the latter in "The Adding Machine," "Jane Clegg," "Back to Methusaleh" and "Strange Interlude."

In addition, the cast of "Another Language" will consist of Dorothy Stickney, John Beal, Maud Allen, Wyrley Birch, Margaret Hamilton, Irene Cattell, Hal K. Dawson and others.

THE attraction promised patrons of the Gayety Theater for the week beginning with Sunday matinee, April 17, is the "Jersey Belles" burlesque company, heralded as one of the worthier of the troupes touring the Columbia "wheel."

The comedy will be in the hands of reliable Joe Freed, and Kitty Ellis is the featured member of the feminine forces.

A fast-stepping chorus is announced as one of the major features of the entertainment.

THE Prohibition Fair, designed to present in dynamic fashion conditions under national prohibition as contrasted with conditions under the licensed sale of liquor, will be the attraction at the Washington Auditorium during the week of April 18-23.

The Fair will provide two and one-half hours of entertainment. Apart from the many exhibits, which will be as far removed from the statistical and sterotyped as possible, there will be a free motion picture and a free soft drink. The film offering will be "Ten Nights in a Barroom," starring William Farnum.

"IRELAND'S ROUGH - HEWN DESTINY," the only film of Erin to receive the unanimous indorsement of clergy, laity, press and Irish societies, is booked for two showings at the National Theater on Sunday, April 17, at 3:30 and 8:30 p. m.

Over 60,000 New Yorkers have seen and heard this beautiful story of Mother Ireland, a story that does justice to a land so full of glorious tradition and ancient learning.

Every Irishman owes it to his native land to see "Ireland's Rough-Hewn Destiny," the only authentic and historical film of Ireland that has ever been shown on the American screen.

CONCERTS FOR NEXT YEAR IN PREPARATION

A superb array of the world's greatest concert stars is announced for appearance in Washington next season, under the management of Mrs. Wilson-Greene, according to a statement which indicates that Paderewski, the great Polish pianist, and Chaliapin, the renowned Russian basso, will both favor Washington with visits here next season.

Mrs. Wilson-Greene will present three concert series next season, in accordance with her usual custom. One of these will be a course of Saturday evening concerts. There will also be two afternoon series, of five concerts each.

All performances will be given at Constitution Hall.

The Saturday evening concert series, the only one definitely formed to date, will consist of six attractions, headed by the fascinating Ethel Leginska and her women's orchestra. This offering comes to Constitution Hall on Saturday evening, November 12 and during the course of the program, Leginska will play a piano concerto as soloist with her own orchestra.

Lucrezia Bori, prima donna soprano of the Metropolitan Opera Company, who was so enthusiastically received upon the last visit of that organization to Washington, will appear in one of her celebrated costume recitals on Saturday evening, November 26, as the second attraction in this series, while Jose Iturbi, the phenomenal Spanish pianist, will return as the third attraction of next season's Saturday evening series.

The fourth Saturday evening concert will be that of the Don Cossack Russian Male Chorus, "the singing horsemen of the steppes," who return on Saturday evening, January 21, for their third triumphant appearance in the Capital, with Yehudi Menuhin, that sensational youthful master of the violin, playing here on Saturday evening, March 25, as the fifth attraction of the course.

FOREIGN FILM FEATURES FOR THE NATIONAL

Two foreign-made pictures will be presented at the National Theater this afternoon and evening.

At 3:30 p. m., for one performance only, the feature will be "The Girl From the Reeperbahn," featuring Trude Berliner, Olga Tschekowa, Hans von Schlettow, Josef Rowensky and Andre Pilot. This is a Tobis Klang production, directed by Karl Anton from a story by Benno Vigny, author of "Morocco." The picture is said to contain a beautiful musical score and three song hits.

At 8:30 p. m., also for one performance only, will be shown the Italian feature, "Rubacuori," meaning "The Heartbreaker." This was produced by the Cines Pittaluga, of Rome, and stars of the most famous of Italy's comedians, Armando Falconi.

Specially selected auxiliary subjects will augment both bills.

POLICIES

tion. But Messiter, his mad anger spent, declines, too.

Only Paul, the young mistress of Magnus, wavers. She first declines to hurt Magnus, then yields to the importunities of Nicholas, agrees to marry him. It is then that Nicholas, declaring that he is going away, discloses himself.

"You see," he says, "I have my work to do * * * God's work * * * God moves in a mysterious way his wonders to perform * * * I offered you all what you thought you wanted most in the world. You set your poor little silly-clever selves up against God and thought you could get away with it. I merely showed you you couldn't. That is my work."

* * * *

This, as has been suggested by an impertinent but partially intelligent looker-over-the-shoulder, would appear to be a helluva job, as you might say, for any self-respecting Devil!

* * * *

AS was the case also with the Earle and RKO-Keith's theaters, the Rialto in presenting "name" acts upon its meager stage is not so much inaugurating a new policy as it is reverting to an old one.

When the Rialto was first thrown open to the public as Tom Moore's "Temple of the Muses," the bill embraced four or five living acts in addition to Mme. Alla Nazimova in Metro's production of "An Eye for an Eye" as the principal screen feature. Considerably later in the history of the Ninth street house, under the musicianly guidance of Mischa Guterson, pretentious stage divertissements frequently constituted an important adjunct of the Rialto's program.

The contention has often been raised that the Rialto is off the beaten track of amusement seekers and thereby suffers appreciably at the box-office for want of "drop in" pedestrian patronage. It was always the view of that august showman, Mr. Tom Moore, that audiences would assemble whenever and wherever there was something they wanted to see. He proved his point years on end while still in personal charge of the conduct of his spacious theater.

* * * *

In the Misses Lilyan Tashman and Dorothy Mackaill, the visiting stars for the first fortnight of the revived policy of living artists at the Rialto, the management has secured personalities in whom Washington has long felt a keen interest and in whose honor the resident gentry may be expected to turn out in large numbers.

* * * *

THE skillful showmanship of East Coast representatives of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer is being made manifest by the shrewd manner in which "The Wet Parade," at the Columbia, is being exploited.

Upon the occasion of the world premiere of this provocative picture in California, an eminently successful effort was made to emphasize the controversial elements inherent in its subject matter and title. It was felt that a little public argument upon the ever-present topic of prohibition would stimulate activity at the box office. Exactly the opposite proved to be the case.

Thus, upon this, the Eastern premiere of "The Wet Parade," the picture is being successfully marketed on its sheer merit as entertainment—not as propaganda or a preachment on either side of the moot question of tippling and law enforcement.

Whatever the individual's views may be in the matter of temperance, it should never be lost sight of that in every audience will be found many who, pressed for a choice, will invariably answer, "I'll take vanilla!"

LEONA POWERS LEADING LADY WITH PLAYERS

Leona Powers, for two seasons leading lady with the National Theater Players, returns once more to resume the leading roles this season by request of the patrons. The management of the players conducted a voting contest among the regular subscribers and Miss Powers' name led all the others. Acceding to the demand, the contract was signed and this week Miss Powers returns from the Pacific Coast where she has been appearing in various traveling and stock organizations.

In past appearances with the National Theater Players, Leona Powers has proved herself an actress of the highest caliber. She is rated as the best repertoire leading woman in the country, having played everything from a Pollyanna role, representing a 12-year-old girl, to a mature woman. One of her outstanding roles was Diane, in "Seventh Heaven." She made such a striking hit in this play that it was repeated three times to capacity audiences.

Clifford Brooks, director of the Players, was very happy to learn that Miss Powers won out in the "quiet poll," as she is one of the most beloved troupers ever to have played with this company. She is an apt study, quick at learning lines, and rarely if ever flustered on opening nights. It is believed, with all her experience of the past two years, that she will return here a far better actress than when she left—though at that time she had reached a high peak in her profession.

With the signing of Leona Powers the roster of the National Theater Players is complete. The other players are Donald Woods, Kathryn Givney, Raymond Bramley, Ona Munson, Owen Davis, jr., Adalaide Hibbard, Burke Clarke, Forrest Orr, and Karl Neilsen.

FUN PROMISED THIS WEEK ON NINTH STREET

Rooters for burlesque may prepare for a regular laughfest at the Gayety Theater this week, starting with the usual Sunday matinee, when the "Hot-Cha Girls" makes its appearance here. It is a Columbia Burlesque attraction and is said to be the leader in the field of light, frothy entertainment, the kind that keeps one in a happy frame of mind without subjecting one's thinking apparatus to the slightest strain.

With stage colorful settings, rich costuming and a thoroughly efficient organization of talented performers, the "Hot-Cha Girls" is real fun. Hazel Miller is the leader of the feminine contingent, ably assisted by those two well known comedians, Lou Devine and Lou Powers.

Boots Rush, Dottie Ahearn, Jim and Genaro, Gambel Bros., Bob Burch and Bobby Leonard round out the roster of the well known principals.

LILYAN TASHMAN, one of the screen's most smartly gowned beauties, who appears in person to inaugurate a new policy at the Rialto this week.

WOODLAND & SMOOT, Emma and Roy, in the order named, principals in Fanchon & Marco's "Gay Vienna" Idea, occupying the Fox stage this week.

CHARLEY CHASE, celebrated funmaker of the screen, who returns to his first love, the stage, to headline the vaudeville bill at RKO-Keith's.

CHARLIE MACK, the droll comic of Moran & Mack, the "two black crows," famous on stage, screen and records, headlining the Earle vaudeville.

About the Chess Table

By WILLARD H. MUTCHLER

Falls Church defeated Model Basin by a score of 5 to 0 to bring the scheduled matches in the District of Columbia Chess League's "five-man" tournament to a close. The board-by-board summary of the final match reads as follows:

Bd.	Falls Church	W.
1	A. D. Hillyar	1
2	Dr. C. A. Ransom	1
3	W. M. Davidson	1
4	H. C. Williams	1
5	J. F. Trabold	1

Bd.	Model Basin	W.

2	D. F. Windenberg	0
3	W. H. Hoppmann	0
4	W. H. Bowers	0
5	E. Threws	0

A. Y. Hesse, president of the league, informs us that it is intended to hold a second round in the team tournament, to which newly entered teams will be eligible. Therefore those desiring to form a team of five or more men are requested to communicate with J. Tucker, jr., 5403 Thirty-ninth street northwest, or telephone him at Emerson 3889.

It appears that the final outcome of the tournament hinges upon a game between A. E. McClure, of Agriculture, and J. H. Parmelee, of Falls Church, which is at present in the hands of this editor for adjudication. In the event that McClure is awarded the victory a tie in the match score will exist between Falls Church and Y. M. C. A., since the final score of the Agriculture versus Falls Church match would then read 3 to 1 in favor of the former.

For the benefit of the Falls Church players we wish to state that the outcome at the present writing looks somewhat dubious for Mr. Parmelee. However, before making the final announcement we are desirous of very carefully checking the variations so far considered, since so much depends upon the decision. The Agriculture player is claiming a win and has submitted several excellent variations to prove his contention. If Falls Church players believe a draw exists it would be to their advantage to also submit such variations as they believe to prove such a claim. In the meantime the standing of the teams is as follows:

Falls Church	4	0	18½	5½
Y. M. C. A.	4	1	17	9
Agriculture	2½	1½	16	10
Bureau Standards	2	3	13	12
Chevy Chase	1½	3½	9½	16½
Model Basin	0	5	2	23

To J. M. Drysdale, of Y. M. C. A., and H. C. Williams, of Falls Church, goes the honor of leading the list of individual competitors from the standpoint of best score. Each player won four games and lost none. The individual standing of the 44 players who participated is appended, the letters following the name being the first of that of the team with which the player was affiliated:

District Championship Tourney.

Only one game was completed in the third round of the District of Columbia Chess League's titular tournament last week. E. M. Knapp drew with A. C. Otten, thus placing the latter within easy striking distance of himself and W. S. Sullivan F. B. Walker and Sullivan adjourned their game in a position where the former had voluntarily given up a R for a Kt and P. The event was also marked by the advent of a new entrant, Valdimir Sournin, well known local player who has been many times champion of the Capital City Club. Sournin's task is not a particularly easy one, since he must play overtime between future scheduled engagements in order to catch up with the remainder of the field. As we go to press we learn that Sournin defeated Knapp, assuming the lead in the tourney. The standing of the players to date is appended:

Player.	Won.	Lost.
V. Sournin	1	0
A. C. Otten	2½	½
E. M. Knapp	1	1
W. S. Sullivan	1	1
J. W. Byler	½	1½
F. B. Walker	0	1

No games of the third round have as yet come to hand, so we give today a final round game of the recently concluded club championship tourney and find C. C. Bettinger, the new champion, closing out his schedule with a victory over A. Y. Hesse. The game is annotated by Mr. Hesse.

Notes by A. Y. Hesse.

(a) B—Q2 was probably safer. The attempt to prevent black's castling Q side proved a loss of time.

(b) Appears to be the best line of play, as it breaks up the black attack, at the same time giving white command of the center, and a strongly posted B, with the loss of only exchange. The game was really lost later, as indicated on the thirty-sixth move.

(c) This wins a piece, but the reaction gives white sufficient recompense in position which should have given him a draw but for a hasty move on the thirty-sixth turn.

(d) Not good, and led to the end; instead 36 QxP, RxP; 37 Q—B6, gives white a fine game; while if 36 ..... QxP, the ensuing exchange of Qs compels black to fight for a draw.

Solutions to Problems.

Now at last comes the solution to No. 475, three-move April Fool offering of L. B. Tuckerman, jr., entitled the "Traitor in Bristol." The keymove is B-Rsq. Black's only possible reply is P-R5. White then retaliates with P-Kt8 and elects a black B! This, solvers, is an illustration of the "Traitor" theme, one in which a pawn may be promoted to a piece of opposite color. The promoted piece must then function at its best in black's behalf. Hence, in order to effect the mate in the required number of moves white must elect to promote to black B. A black B could prevent mate by P-Kt2; a R or Q by capturing white's R with a check; a Kt by Kt-B3; and leaving the P unpromoted would result in stalemate. The newly acquired black B may make any move and white then mates by Q-Kt2. The keymove of the white B, clearing a line of action for the white Q, is the theme illustrative of the "Bristol." In order, therefore, the solution to No. 475 reads: 1 B-Rsq, P-R5; 2 P-Kt8 (black B), B moves; 3 Q-Kt2 mate.

Only one solver, who prefers to be known as "Robias," found the sequence of proper moves. He writes, "Without time or chance to look up any themes, I hazard a guess that the white pawn promotes himself to a black bishop. More spy than traitor, he thus permits B-Rsq and Q-Kt mate. If I could speak for your solvers at large, I might say we are a respectable family and want nothing to do with illegitimate chess."

Jacob Frech comments, "Problem 475, a purported three-mover, generates about 100,000 series viewed as a four-mover. A brief tentative relevant middle term for it is: A problem in which white, by playing any one of his 20 initial moves except Q-R5 or 6 or 7 or B-Kt8 or P-R4, can force at least 70 forced quickest mates in four moves. This assigns the problem 15 keymoves."

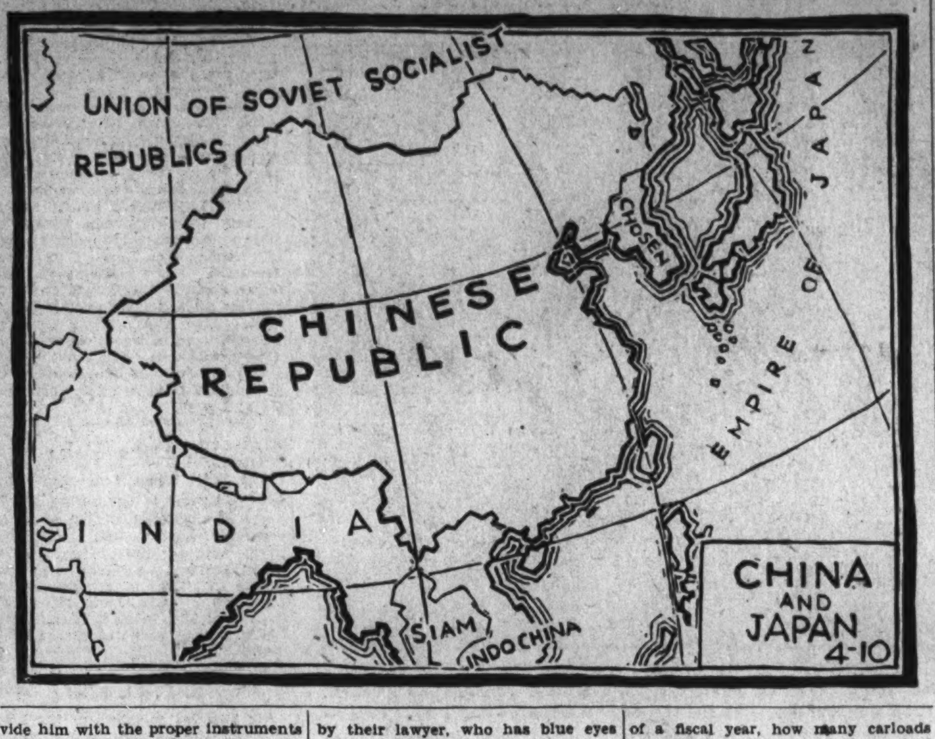
CHAPTER XLIII.



CHINA is one of the largest countries in the world. It occupies 526,378,971 square miles of newspaper front pages.

It is entirely populated by soldiers, war correspondents, nurses, ambulance drivers, refugees and Japanese.

It is one of the oldest countries in the world, but it is still too young to know any better.

Its principal industry is trying to locate masked batteries and get the League of Nations to show a little action. It is not making much progress in either respect.

Its chief products are war lords, conflicting bulletins, international crises and passes for Floyd Gibbons through the battle area.

China has an area of 4,376,400 square miles. It is irregular in shape and in politics.

The climate is not bad, but even if it were good it would be hard to sell it under present conditions.

It is famous as a T. N. T. growing nation. It also produces rice, silk, bandits, embarrassing situations and waiters for Chinese restaurants.

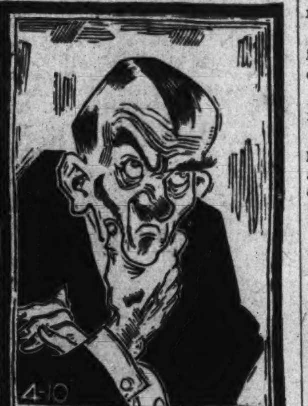
It is a very rich farming country and one of the impressive pastoral studies is the picture of millions of Chinese farmers diligently engaged in plowing their fields with aerial bombs, tanks, spades and shrapnel.

The Chinese gave the world its first fireworks and is now giving a bigger and better display than ever, with the cooperation of the Japanese.

China was a monarchy for years, but became a republic and now she has as many troubles as the most progressive nations.

It has a population of 385,000,000 in China proper, but no part of China is very proper just now.

One of its features is the Great Wall of China. This wall was built to keep out invaders. On what has happened in the past six months China can sue the builder.



WHO is this?

This is Waldo.

Who is Waldo?

Waldo is a weather forecaster.

What is Waldo doing?

Waldo is preparing his prediction for tomorrow's weather.

What will he predict?

It doesn't make much difference. If he predicts fair and warmer it will be rainy and very much colder. If he predicts rain it will mean the best weather in weeks.

Doesn't the weather ever come out the way Waldo predicts?

Not very often.

How does he explain this?

He doesn't explain it.

Who employs Waldo?

The Government.

And doesn't the Government provide him with the proper instruments and devices for forecasting the weather?

Oh, yes, but Waldo doesn't use them.

Why not?

He thinks it is all done by mirrors.

Is it all done by mirrors?

No, but it might as well be.

The Story of Henry.

4. He knew all the big words before he was 7.
5. By the time he was 10 years old he could read any book without stumbling over a word. He liked stilted styles and worshiped heroes and heroines with names like Cassiopeia, Ariadne and Penelope.
6. He entered college at 14 and was graduated before the dean knew he was among those present.
7. He was the most brilliant scholar the English class had ever known.
8. His class voted him the most likely to succeed.
9. Nothing was heard from him for some years.
10. Finally he came to a class reunion. He had found his niche in life.
11. It seems he had made a connection with the Pullman people naming their parlor cars.

Problems in Arithmetic.

1. John has an income of $1,000,000 a year, Fred has an income of $23,000 a year and Harry has no income whatsoever. Under the provisions of the new State and Federal income tax laws, will one be any better off than the other at the end of the year?

2. If a man 6 feet 1 inch in height, weighing 210 pounds, takes 72 hours to decide that making out an income tax blank in this day is too difficult for him, how long will it take two men 5 feet 10 inches tall and weighing aggregately 250 pounds to reach the same conclusion, even when aided by their lawyer, who has blue eyes and a red mustache?

3. If a man 32 years old has to wait seven minutes in a pay station telephone booth to get his nickel back, how long will it take a man 45 years of age to get a refund from the Government on his income tax payments for the year 1927?

4. A works fifteen hours a day, six days a week; B works twelve hours a day, six days a week, and C is employed eight hours a day, seven days a week. Under present conditions, how can you explain it?

5. An old man can walk a certain distance in fifteen minutes. How many hours will it take a messenger boy to cover the same distance on a bicycle?

6. A novice horseback rider travels 4 miles horizontally traveling through a public park. How many miles does he cover up and down?

7. Prof. Einstein can explain his theory of relativity in 2 minutes 46 seconds, with a favorable wind; how long will it take the same gentleman to explain any play seen by him in the modern game of American football? And even then, how wrong will he be?

8. If 48,000,345 tons of sand falls into the Panama Canal in the course of a fiscal year, how many carloads of spinach would have to be washed on the banks of the same canal to attain similar results?

9. George owns two race horses, William owns three race horses, and Charles owns four race horses; how long, unless the depression ends pretty soon, will it be before they will have to eat them?

THE TAKEOUT DOUBLE.

LESSON NO. 19.

WHEN the Defending Hand has a fairly strong holding—usually at least 3 honor tricks—he may double for a Takeout if his partner has not yet made a bid. (The only declaration which is not a bid is a pass.) It is absolutely essential, however, that the Defending Hand be able to stand behind any bid that may be made by partner, or have a strong suit to escape into if his partner's bid is a complete misfit.

A Double of not more than one notrump or not more than two in a suit is a Takeout Double when partner has not bid. (The Opening bidder may also double for a Takeout when his partner passes, if his Opening bid was a suit and not notrump.) If the Doubler, having failed to get response from his partner because of an intervening adverse bid, doubles again on the next round, this is also a Takeout Double. Partner is released from responding if the Double is taken out by an intervening bid by an opponent.

It may be mentioned here that a Takeout Double is called an Informatory Double by many players. The term "Takeout Double," however, is to be preferred, since all Doubles are necessarily informatory.

The minimum honor-trick holding justifying a Takeout Double is 3 honor-tricks divided in three suits, or 3 honor-tricks divided in two suits if the Doubler has a good biddable suit in addition. Even with 3 honor-tricks, a Takeout Double is a dangerous weapon when vulnerable, unless the Doubler has a good biddable suit to escape into or the hand is otherwise strengthened. The Doubler must remember that his Double shows strength, and obviously he should not lead partner to expect strength when he does not have it.

Suppose the opening bid is one club, and that you hold:

Spades K 3 2
Hearts K Q J 8 6
Diamonds A Q 7 4
Clubs 7

You have 3½ honor-tricks—an unusually strong hand against an Opening bid. You could, of course, bid one heart, but this simple Overcall does not give your partner any inkling of your unusual strength. At the same time, the heart suit is really not strong enough to bid two hearts—a Jump Overcall. You can quite legitimately make a Takeout Double (simply by saying "Double"), thereby forcing your partner to respond if the opponent on your left passes, or enabling your partner to make a "free" response, showing supporting strength if the opponent on your left makes a bid. If necessary, you can escape any unsatisfactory bid (minimum response) made by partner by bidding your heart suit the next time around, or you can show your hearts by bidding two in that suit, showing a sound biddable suit, but one not strong enough for a Jump Overcall originally.

Similarly, with the following hand after an Opening one no-trump bid:

Spades A K J 8 7
Hearts 5
Diamonds A Q 5 2
Clubs 5 4 3

containing 3½ honor-tricks, Defending Hand may double for a Takeout. If partner responds with two hearts, this hand is strong enough to escape with a bid of two spades.

The Defending Hand should not overcall with one or more notrump unless he holds at least one stopper (winning honor) in the opponents' bid suit. With 2½ honor-tricks and a stopper in the opponents' suit, an Overcall with one notrump is proper, but with a stronger hand, containing 3½ honor-tricks, it is probably better to make a Takeout Double and bid two notrump later, if necessary, in order to escape an undesirable response by partner. For example, with:

Spades A J 7 6
Hearts K J 3 2
Diamonds A J 10
Clubs 3 2

the 3½ honor-tricks justify a two notrump Overcall of a one diamond Opening bid, but the hand is quite strong enough for a Takeout Double, since partner may respond with spades or hearts, permitting perhaps a game contract in one of those suits. If partner has to respond with two clubs, the Doubler can escape with two notrump, since he holds two stoppers (Ace and Knave) in the opponents' diamond suit.

Occasionally a Takeout Double is justified with only 2½ honor-tricks in two suits if the Doubler also has a fairly solid biddable suit as an escape. Such a Takeout Double should be avoided when vulnerable, however.

When the Opening bidder has a hand much stronger than 2½ honor-tricks, but not strong enough for a forcing two-bid, he has a Takeout Double in reserve if his partner fails to support his Opening bid. For example, suppose you hold:

Spades 5 3
Hearts A Q J 10 4
Diamonds K Q 4
Clubs A Q 6

This hand contains 4 honor-tricks and a biddable heart suit, 1½ honor-tricks stronger than required to open the bidding. According to the Approach principle, the proper Opening bid is one heart. If an opponent overcalls with one spade, and partner passes, you can then double for a Takeout, forcing partner to bid if the opponent on your left does not take out the Double, for you have 6½ playing tricks, quite enough to justify a later bid of two hearts, and partner may have something in diamonds or clubs.

TODAY'S POINTER.

The Takeout Double is an effective weapon in the correct bidding of hands at Contract Bridge. However, it should not be made on hands containing so few honor and playing-tricks as to make it probable that the Double will prove a boomerang.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS.

A Warning and—

Question—Will you please give the correct bidding? West dealt and passed. North held:

Spades 4
Hearts A K J 8 2
Diamonds A 4 3
Clubs K Q 7 6

East passed. South held:

Spades A 10 8 7 6 3 2
Hearts 9 6 5 3
Diamonds J 9
Clubs —

Answer—The correct bidding of these hands would be:

North	South
1 heart	4 hearts
5 hearts	6 hearts

North's bid of five hearts is an invitation to partner to bid for Slam if he has any additional values over those shown by his Raise to four. As a matter of fact, South does hold added values in the length of the spade suit and should bid for a Slam. The making of it depends entirely upon the distribution of the trumps or possibly a favorable lead.

Opening Two Notrump Bid.

Question—If partner's Opening bid is two notrump, what strength do I need to raise to three?

Answer—An Opening two notrump shows between 4 and 4½ honor-tricks with four suits well stopped. Partner, therefore, needs slightly better than 1 honor-trick to raise from two to three.

This is the nineteenth of a series of articles in response to requests from numerous readers designed to explain the elementary principles of Contract Bridge. One of these will appear each week. In them Mr. Culbertson will write especially for the benefit of those who have never played Contract and who may even be unfamiliar with the methods of playing it. The articles will cover the game from its basic elements to the higher phases of Contract Bridge. The series in its entirety will comprise a complete course of instruction in "How to Play Contract."

Radio Dial Flashes

By ROBERT D. HEINL

GEN. CHARLES McK. SALTZMAN, chairman of the Federal Radio Commission, wasn't in the Army for 30 years without learning to hold his own in the "old Army game." Shortly after Gen. Saltzman became chairman of the Radio Commission, he received a tremendously long letter from a certain broadcaster, asking numerous questions. The general, not being as well acquainted with this individual as some of his colleagues were, conscientiously endeavored to answer each and every one of the questions.

To his surprise, a coupe of weeks later, in came another equally long communication from the same broadcaster, asking the identical questions which had been answered. Again the general replied conscientiously but in about the same period he received a third communication almost like the other two.

Whereupon the general blocked out a certain form letter containing blanket answers to all of the questions which had been asked up to that time, and said to his capable secretary, Hazel Smith: "Hereafter, when this man writes to us, just send him this same letter."

This performance continued for some time, when one day the broadcaster came to Washington.

"General," he said, apparently nonplused, "every time I write to you, you send me back the same kind of a reply."

"Sure," the general replied, "because every time you write to me you ask the same questions. As long as you continue to bombard me with the same questions I am going to give you the same answers."

Apparently the broadcaster saw the light because, though he continues to trouble others, he is no longer a problem to the general.

IT is marvelous that a radio signal will penetrate more than 10 feet of solid lead, more than 500 feet of solid rock, and will go around the world more than seven times while the clock ticks once, Thomas P. Littlepage, vice president of the Washington Chamber of Commerce, said, speaking over Station WJSV last week.

"Those sitting in the studio listening to me broadcast will not hear me as quickly as I will be heard in Richmond, North Carolina, West Virginia or Maryland. If this station were operating on short wave, not as quickly as I would be heard in England," Mr. Littlepage continued. "Do you realize that fingerprints and pictures are sent by radio? That a battleship will soon be operated by radio without a living soul aboard?

"A few years ago I was in the radio room of one of the big steamships in midocean. I happened to comment to the operator on the beauty of the day and the calmness of the sea. He smiled and said, 'Wait until 4 o'clock this afternoon and see what happens.' I asked him what he meant. He said that he had received a communication from another ship several hundred miles away that a tremendous hurricane was headed our way at the rate of 80 miles per hour.

"A little before 4 o'clock we saw in the distance clouds that resembled mountains from the sky to the sea. The roar of the hurricane could be heard and we came into the billows that threw their dashing arms over the top of the ship and into the ocean on the other side, but everything was prepared—the captain and crew had had hours notice of what they were coming into."

Mr. Littlepage spoke of a transatlantic passenger picking up a telephone in his stateroom on a ship in midocean and being able to call up his home in any part of the United States. He told of a Washington police scout car summoned by radio arriving in time to catch a robber before he could leave the building.

HOW pilots of the United Air Lines fly the mail over a 3,000-mile route will be described during the first three-way broadcast from planes speeding over New York, Chicago and San Francisco tonight at 11:30 o'clock over WRC.

Postmaster General Walter F. Brown will open the broadcast with a two-minute address from Washington. A. E. "Ted" Westlake, dispatcher, will then transmit weather observations and orders to the three ships. Three veteran fliers, "Bill" Williams, leaving New York; Jack Knight, flying the route west of Chicago, and Ray Little, Eastward bound from San Francisco, will be heard during the broadcast. George Hicks, of the New York announcing staff, will speak from the New York plane, Charles Lyon from the Chicago ship and Jennings Pierce from the San Francisco plane. James Wallington will report activities at the Newark Airport, and establish communication with the announcers riding the night mail.

The Rev. W. Coleman Nevils, president of Georgetown University, will preach on the Washington Catholic Radio Hour, which will be broadcast from the Church of the Immaculate Conception over Station WOL at 5 o'clock this afternoon. Father Hurney, director of the broadcast services, will preside.

The musical program, with Florence Yocum, Mary O'Donoghue and Ann Arlen, soloists, will be directed by Prof. Harry Wheaton Howard, organist.

Sir Thomas Beecham will again conduct the New York Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra this afternoon (WMAL, 3 o'clock; WABC, 4 o'clock) from Carnegie Hall, New York.

Following is the complete program: Overture to "The Bartered Bride" (Smetana), "The Garden of Fand" (Bax), Serenade for Strings (Tschaikovsky), Olin Downes Description, Concerto in E Minor (Handel), intermezzo from "A Village Romeo and Juliet" (Delius), introduction and march from "Le Coq d'Or" (Rimsky-Korsakoff).

The first of a series of international broadcasts from America to Switzerland, designed for the entertainment of Swiss radio listeners, will be sent overseas this afternoon (WRC, 1:45 o'clock).

Marc Peter, Swiss Ambassador to the United States, will be the principal speaker. He will deliver a message of greeting to the German and French speaking residents of Switzerland. Kurt Sell, Berlin news correspondent, will open the program by introducing Pierre de Salis, attache of the Swiss Legation in Washington. Sell will speak in German and De Salis in French. The musical program from New York will trace the development of American music from pioneer days to the present.

The series was arranged with the Swiss Broadcasting Co., which will, in turn, short wave Swiss programs designed for American radio listeners to N. B. C.

AN all-Wagner program, including excerpts from "Lohengrin," "The Dusk of the Gods" and "Tristan und Isolde," will be presented with Jeanne Soudeikine, soprano, and Sonia Essin, mezzo-soprano, as guest soloists, during the Walter Damrosch Symphonic Hour today (WJZ network, 1 p. m.) * * * An international Radio Forum, headed by leaders of various professions in France and in the United States, will be inaugurated from Paris today (WJZ network, 4 p. m.). M. Jusserand, former French Ambassador, will be the first speaker * * * John McCormack, Irish tenor, will be guest soloist on the GE Circle this afternoon (WRC, 5:30 p. m.), singing "Drink to Me Only With Thine Eyes," "Somewhere a Voice Is Calling," "Mother Machree" and "My Wild Irish Rose" * * * German election returns will be broadcast from time to time by both networks during this evening * * * Sir James Jeans, eminent British scientist and authority on the structure of the universe, will speak from London (WMAL, 12:30 p. m.) today * * * Jane Froman is the new guest soloist on the Iodent program which changes to 4 p. m. over WRC today * * * Helen Morgan will be one of the headliners with the second presentation of the "Ziegfeld Radio Show" (WMAL, 8 p. m.) tonight.

Tabor, of New York, was one of the visitors present. The department president and the department officers addressed the meeting. The members were entertained by "Uncle Tom and His Hired Help," who played many of the old-time popular melodies. Those taking part were James Edwards, William E. Simpson, Harry Bolls and John Simpson, with Dr. Thomas Gates as Uncle Tom. Arthur Curtain rendered several solos, assisted by Mrs. Myrtle Case at the piano. Mrs. Bertha Fitzgerald and her committee served a colonial tea.

Rancher Makes Arrowheads.

Bridgeport, Nebr., (U.P.).—S. R. Sweet, rancher, is as good at making arrowhead points as the Indians who used to roam these prairies. Sweet, using a bone implement, has made over 200 fine arrowhead specimens. He is really one-up on the Indians, for he has taken bits of colored glass and fashioned beautiful, razor-edged arrowheads.

Takeoffs and Landings

By HARRIS B. HULL

AN interesting new "safety" airplane is being developed over in Baltimore under the firm and efficient thumb of Temple Joyce, that master of test and engineering pilots. The safety device consists of an unique type of flap, which according to competent observers, combines the safety features of the flap, slot and floating aileron which were employed on the Curtiss-Wright "Tanger," the winner of the $100,000 Guggenheim Foundation safety competition which approximated that amount to produce. The "Zap" flap, as it is known, is now attached to a General "Aristocrat" cabin monoplane and is said to reduce landing speed 20 miles an hour and decrease takeoff speed similarly.

Of course, Temple Joyce is one of the world's best pilots. He can do things with an airplane no one else of sane mind would dream of. He was skeptical of the plane at first, but after a very conservative tryout when he was not exactly sure of the inventor's claims—they seemed too good to be true—he came down thoroughly sold.

One of the features of the "Zap" flap is that good aileron control is maintained at all times. Suction forms in the area between the flap and the top surface of the wing which, unlike other types of flap, is retained rigid over the flap area. The ailerons are placed above the wing.

Unlike the combination flap and slot "safety" planes, there is only one extra control for the pilot to manipulate. This is similar, and works as easily from the manual standpoint as a conventional worm-gear stabilizer adjustment. It appears as if the B-J Corporation is going ahead with this development, which, if it works, is something of interest to the aviation industry.

THE Department of Commerce has set up a model airport in their building with all the equipment from lights to radio. It is very educational and is worth your attention. It is on the fifth floor.

Lieut. Richard K. LeBrou, of the Air Corps and Maj. N. S. Talbott, Field Artillery, faced death for more than an hour in a B-4A bomber near Scott Field, Ill., recently when they were caught in a heavy hail and wind storm just as they were about to land. Their faces were cut and badly bruised by the giant stones which broke many windows on the ground. After a long battle the flier got the ship on the ground and was warmly congratulated by his fellow officers.

All regularly scheduled air transport operations out of Washington are now conducted from Washington-Hoover airport. The night air mail service was formerly flown from Bolling Field but with the announcement that the wires would be taken down at the commercial field, the mail planes will now use that base.

TWO new-type Navy planes made their first public appearance at the national aircraft show in Detroit, Mich., last week. One is an observation plane powered with a two-row radial aircraft engine fostered by the Navy, and the other is an airship fighter, the prototype of those destined to be based on and operated from the U. S. S. Akron.

The new observation plane for shipboard use will be of interest chiefly for its two-row radial air-cooled engine, a radical change from the conventional single-row radial engine and a development of two years' efforts on the part of the Navy Department and commercial aircraft companies. The new engine has a specific weight of 1.33 pounds per horsepower, and although further analyses and tests must be carried out it is believed that the new engine will insure greater smoothness, less frontal area, better vision for the pilot, sufficient power, and better reliability and durability than that of current types.

The airship fighter is only 19 feet long, has a wing span of 25 feet 6 inches, a top speed of approximately 180 miles an hour, and can climb 1,800 feet a minute. It was designed to be the smallest airplane which could be built around a compact 420-horsepower motor, with pilot and required military equipment on board.

A NEW departure in the design of a military-type airplane, an observation type, model designation YO-40, constructed by the Curtiss Aeroplane & Motor Co., Inc., was just received at the materiel division of the Air Corps at Wright Field, Dayton, Ohio. This airplane differs from the high wing monoplane in that it is a sesquiplane, the lower wing being of the stub type.

Embodying the latest method of metal construction, this new observation ship is equipped with the retractable landing gear, a feature which is calculated to increase its speed, and is powered with a Wright "Cyclone" engine. It is to be subjected to extensive tests by Air Corps pilots to determine its suitability for use in the military service.

ACCORDING to present plans two of the most colorful events on the aviation calendar will not be held this year. The Air Corps maneuvers which thrilled many millions of persons in all parts of the country are slated to be confined this year to local flights. The program of economy and the criticism of the pacifist element of our population are believed to be the reasons. One is about as sensible as the other. The Air Corps maneuvers do not cost any more than routine training flights conducted by the same planes at their home stations, and are productive of invaluable tactical information to Air Corps officers. Fanatical pacifists will continue to criticize everything and anything of military worth. It is to be hoped that the maneuvers will again be flown but at this writing it does not look very likely.

The other event which is slated to go by the boards is the Schneider Cup race in England, also because of a program of economy. In this writer's opinion these races had long outlived their worth and they will not be missed.

W. IRVING GLOVER, Assistant Postmaster General in Charge of Air Mail, after returning from the National Aircraft Show at Detroit early in the week, said that, in his opinion, 1,000,000 passengers would be carried in the air during the present year.

Mr. Glover remarked that there was considerable discussion at the show regarding the use of large ships as compared with smaller ones which can be operated on more frequent schedules. On this important question he said: "It seems to be the consensus of opinion to favor the small, speedier planes with a landing speed within reason."

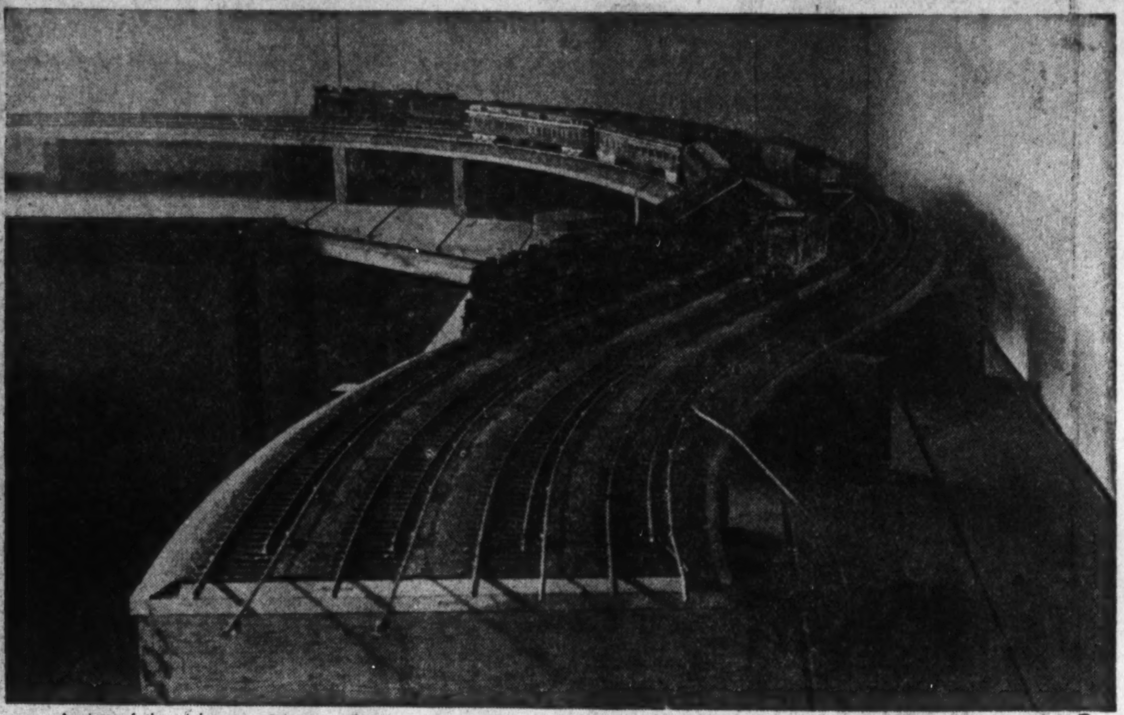
How a Pee-wee Railroad Developed Into a Business

Harmon B. Vanderhoef Jr. of Greenwich, Conn., builder of miniature railway systems, watching a tiny train pass through a bridge on the railroad built in the attic of the home of his partner, Minton Cronkite. (Acme photos.)



A view of the elaborate miniature railroad system constructed in the attic of a home in Greenwich, Conn. The system is provided with sufficient trackage to handle the various kinds of traffic found on a full-sized railroad.

NOTHING so interests the small boy as the toy electric train. Maybe that is because every boy at any early age dreams of becoming an engineer some day. Boys can play by the hour with their miniature trains, seemingly never growing weary of watching the tiny locomotive and the bright little cars sweep around the small oval track. The toy railway system is not only the plaything of the little boy, it is the hobby of quite a number of grown-ups as well.

In Greenwich, Conn., are two men who have carried their miniature railway hobby so far that they have developed it into a profitable business. Minton Cronkite and Harmon B. Vanderhoef Jr. some time ago constructed a miniature railway in the attic of Cronkite's home in Greenwich. The attic railroad was elaborated on from time to time until now it represents a complete system, with a limited express, local accommodations, freights, mail trains, and a wide variety of other rolling stock, all electrically operated on a multiple track system. The control of the tiny trains is just like that on a full sized railroad. With a complete signal system, no train can pass a red light

The two men, who first built their toy railroad for amusement, now have gone into the business of supplying parts to amateur miniature railroad builders and manufacturing models for industrial and educational exhibits.

Cronkite and Vanderhoef are working now on a complete toy railroad system to be exhibited at the Century of Progress exposition to be held in Chicago next year.

peaks, some of which attain a height of 11,000 feet.

Many of the mountain tops are of volcanic nature, there being about 45 of this variety on the island. Several eruptions have taken place within historic time, that of Krakatao, in the strait of Sunda, being a memorable disaster. It occurred in 1883.

It is believed that the great fertility of the lowlands is due largely to the volcanic action which has occurred in the course of ages. Over long periods of time a rich deposit has been formed upon the surface of the ground which makes possible the growing of a great variety of crops.

One of the peculiarities of Java is the fact that, although it lies very close to the equator, it is comparatively cool. Data are not available for the island as a whole, but the records of the capital, Batavia, which is located in the western lowlands, quote the mean annual temperature as 79 degrees. According to these same records, there is little variation throughout the entire year, the reading for the warmest month, May, being given as 79.5 degrees and for the coldest month, January, 77.6 degrees. Thus there is perpetual summer in the lower part of the island.

Seasons on Java, instead of being divided into hot and cold, are called wet and dry. They are governed by the direction of the wind, the rainy season occurring between November and March when the west monsoon is blowing, and the dry season during the rest of the year when the east monsoon prevails. A monsoon is simply a wind off the sea.

Java lies directly in the path of all the great atmospheric movements between Asia and Australia. Its climate is affected by the neighborhood of vast expanses of water and sizable bodies of land, Borneo and Sumatra.

The people of Java are mostly of Malay stock. In theory they are Moslems, but in reality their religion is highly colored by superstitions which they inherited from their ancestors centuries before their introduction to foreign influence. The Hindus are believed to have invaded the island in about the first century A. D., and they have left the ruins of temples to commemorate the type of culture which they established. The first definite mention of Java is made in the chronicle of Marco Polo, a thirteenth century document. In the late fourteenth century the Arabs invaded the island, spreading the religion of Mohammed, and drove out the Hindu princes. When the Dutch came in the sixteenth century, they found the Mohammedan faith widespread. Since that date the Dutch have controlled the island, with one brief exception, during the Napoleonic wars, when the French flag was raised. That brought in the English, who defeated the French, and after a short time gave the island back to the Dutch.

All of the officials are now Dutch with the exception of the rulers of the villages, who are natives elected by the people. But even these leaders must receive the approval of the government before they can control even local affairs.

Britishers Honoring a Martyred Monarch

(Acme photo.)

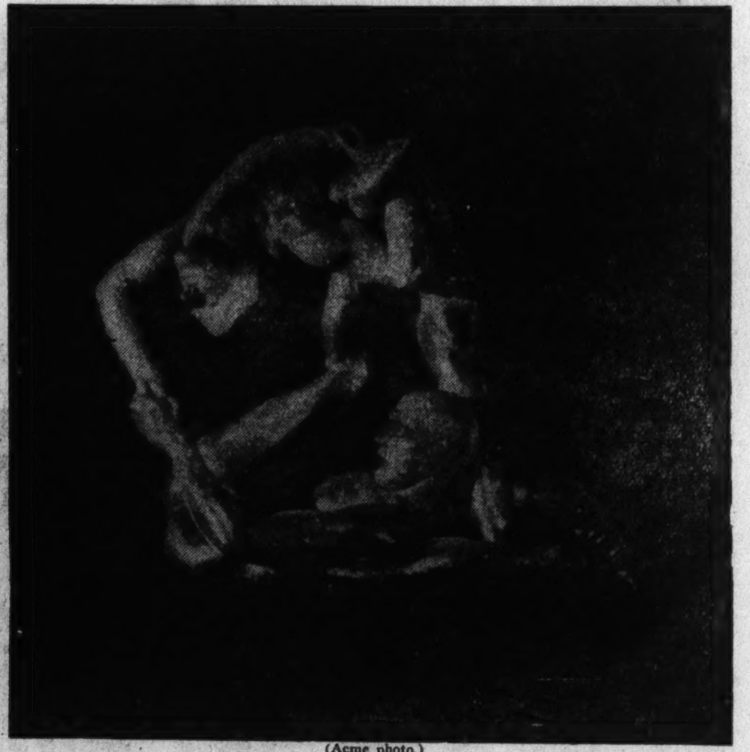
Producing an Aquatic Illusion



(Acme photo.)

ISLANDERS of the South seas may dive to great depths in the ocean to search for pearls, and professionals in the salvage business may grope among wrecks far below the surface of the sea, but one would hardly expect to find contortionists performing on the ocean bottom by the dim light that filters through the green waters. But look at the accompanying picture! Apparently these two, the famous Spurgats, French contortionists, are going through their act in submarine surroundings. It is only an illusion, however, as the performers are not in water at all, the light effect being achieved by a secret preparation with which the Spurgats coat themselves before appearing on the stage.

"Vacuuming" to Keep Eggs Fresh

A BACTERIOLOGIST in the food research division of the United States department of agriculture has found a way to keep eggs fresh. The ordinary cold storage egg is likely to grow stale through loss of moisture and carbon dioxide, but T. L. Swenson, the bacteriologist, has perfected a method which overcomes the action of nature and permits the egg to retain all of its natural freshness for months. While the egg still is naturally fresh he puts it in oil in an airtight chamber. Then he pumps the air out of the chamber to create a partial vacuum. Next he introduces carbon dioxide gas into the chamber, and the egg, once more surrounded by gas of normal pressure, draws the oil into the pores of its shell to form a complete seal. In the picture Mr. Swenson is shown demonstrating his vacuum treatment of eggs.

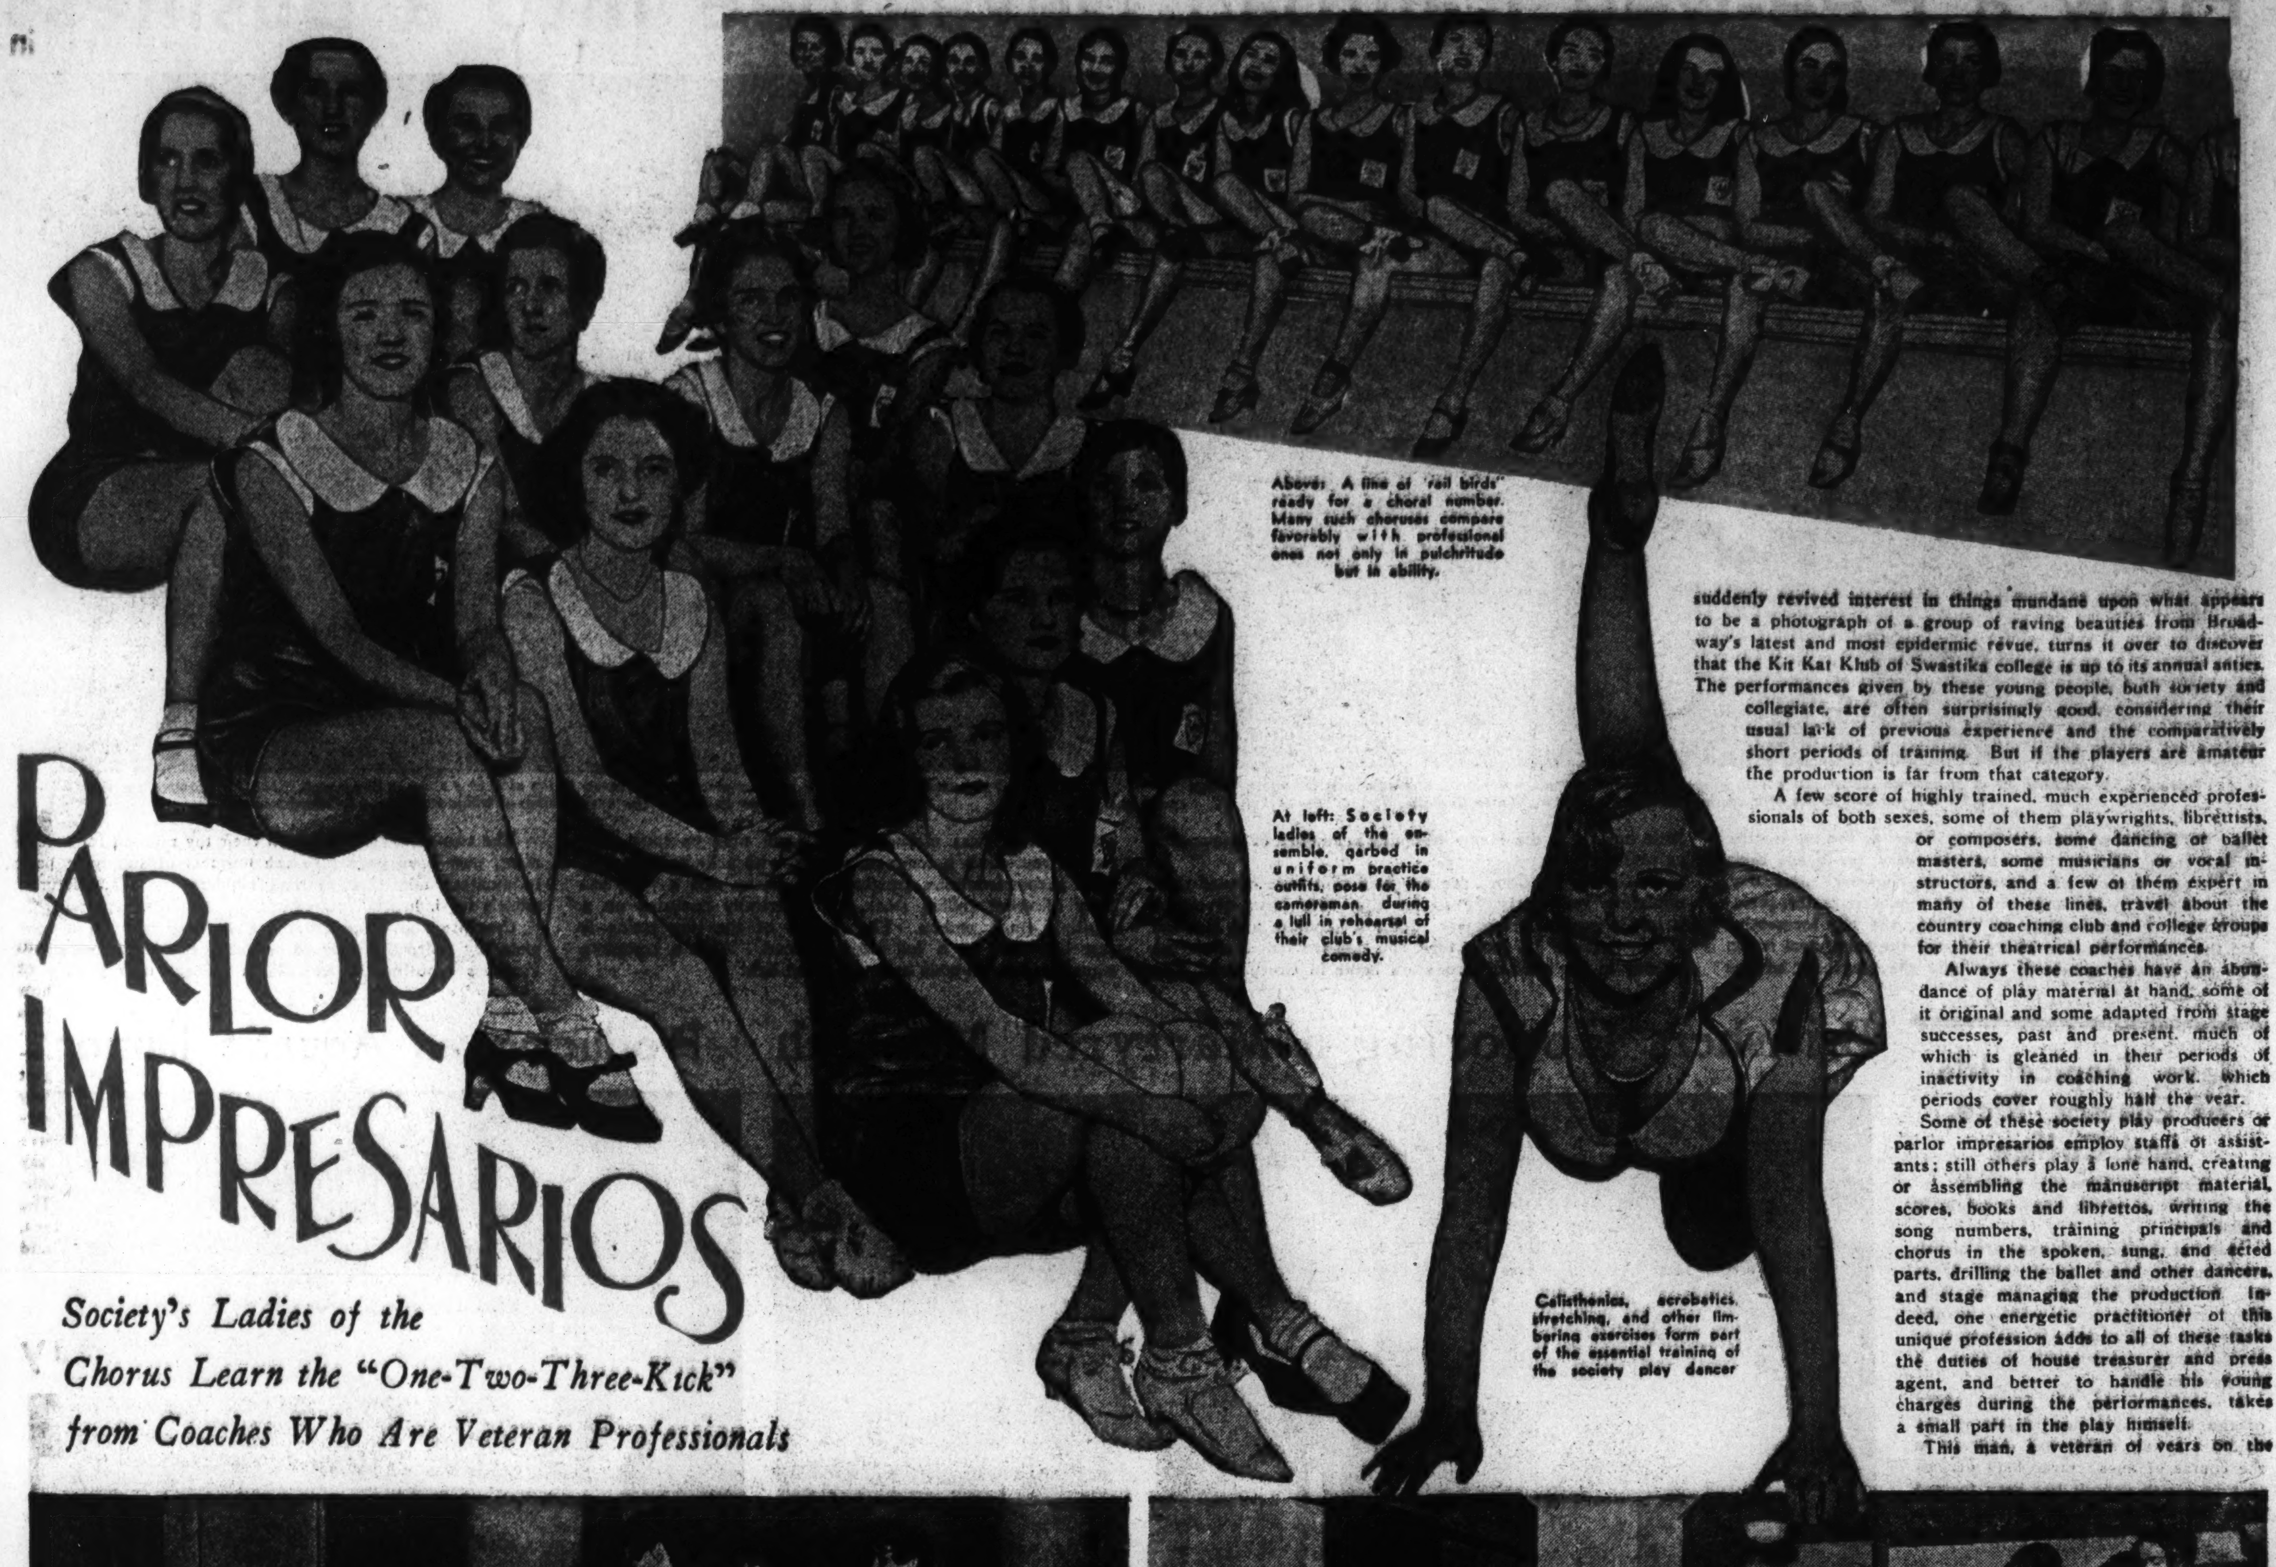
A Poet's Shrine in a Warrior's Quarters

(Chicago Tribune photo.)

THE Virginia shrine to Edgar Allen Poe, American poet and creator of eerie tales, was once George Washington's headquarters. The shrine, which is in Richmond, is a low structure, with a steep, sloping roof. Washington occupied it as leader of the Revolutionary forces. Since 1925, when the structure was converted into the Poe shrine, many relics of the poet have been placed inside. Today the building has a double significance—historical and literary.

PARLOR IMPRESARIOS

Society's Ladies of the Chorus Learn the "One-Two-Three-Kick" from Coaches Who Are Veteran Professionals



Above: A line of "rail birds" ready for a choral number. Many such choruses compare favorably with professional ones not only in pulchritude but in ability.

At left: Society ladies of the ensemble, garbed in uniform practice outfits, pose for the cameraman during a lull in rehearsal of their club's musical comedy.

Calisthenics, acrobatics, stretching, and other limbering exercises form part of the essential training of the society play dancer

Hours of this "one-two-three-kick" routine produces a "Broadway" chorus far from the Gay White Way.

By Marjorie Trent

ONCE upon a time there lived a perfectly normal young person of what was known, even in those days, as the gentler sex, who felt no inner urge to daub her face with a smear of theatrical makeup, garb her fair form in the raiment of a bygone period—or of no period in particular—and, tripping blithely through the wings, proceed to panic her awe-stricken, admiring relatives and friends right out of their orchestra seats.

This indifferent—and hypothetical—young lady was the daughter of a prominent flint arrowhead and stone hatchet manufacturer, and her disinterest in such proceedings, an indifference without precedent or repetition in social history, was probably caused by her undivided interest in the job of evading a young clubman of her set, who had announced his intention of wooing her in the manner accepted as au fait in those days—which is why he was known as a clubman.

Which preamble, bringing us by easy stages to 1932, paves the way for the observations which are to follow.

For a month or so of each year, the younger ornaments of polite society (Junior and Welfare and other leaguers, Service and Country clubbers), undergo a period of intensive education in which the three R's are replaced by the "one-two-three-kick," in preparation for the few performances of their annual plays, the "gate" at which offerings they hope will swell the charity funds of their communities, and in which Thespian endeavors they will have the opportunity to engage in the "panicking" activities mentioned some time back.

Of course there are male parts in these performances, and equally of course, a sufficient number of young swains can be rounded up for such roles. Adult males have been known to give their wives' dogs their daily airings and to sit uncomplainingly through operas, so it is little wonder that the adolescent male will lend himself to the above proceedings. Some of them even like it.

But the business does not stop there: it extends to our higher institutions of learning, where groups of young male collegians cultivate, for a moment, a falsetto intonation, worry for the first and last time in their lives about neck lines, and attempt to wrest the laurels from the brow of Julian Eltinge, in an annual mass female impersonation. These counterfeits delude an occasional world weary picture editor, who, gazing with suddenly revived interest in things mundane upon what appears to be a photograph of a group of raving beauties from Broadway's latest and most epidermic revue, turns it over to discover that the Kit Kat Klub of Swastika college is up to its annual antics. The performances given by these young people, both society and collegiate, are often surprisingly good, considering their usual lack of previous experience and the comparatively short periods of training. But if the players are amateur the production is far from that category.

A few score of highly trained, much experienced professionals of both sexes, some of them playwrights, librettists, or composers, some dancing or ballet masters, some musicians or vocal instructors, and a few of them expert in many of these lines, travel about the country coaching club and college groups for their theatrical performances.

Always these coaches have an abundance of play material at hand, some of it original and some adapted from stage successes, past and present, much of which is gleaned in their periods of inactivity in coaching work, which periods cover roughly half the year.

Some of these society play producers or parlor impresarios employ staffs of assistants; still others play a lone hand, creating or assembling the manuscript material, scores, books and librettos, writing the song numbers, training principals and chorus in the spoken, sung, and acted parts, drilling the ballet and other dancers, and stage managing the production. Indeed, one energetic practitioner of this unique profession adds to all of these tasks the duties of house treasurer and press agent, and better to handle his young charges during the performances, takes a small part in the play himself.

This man, a veteran of years on the stage, is authority for the statement that amateur companies, in general, are easier to manage than professional ones.

Says he: "When a group of young people engage a professional coach they usually accept as final his decisions as to casting, material, and such other major matters, submerging their own personal desires for the success of the piece. They display few outbursts of temperament and almost no cases of jealousy. In only one respect do they present a more difficult problem than do professional performers, and that is in the matter of attendance at rehearsals. For they are busy young people with a multitude of outside interests and the task of getting them all at one place at the same time is their sole slight contribution to my gray hairs!"

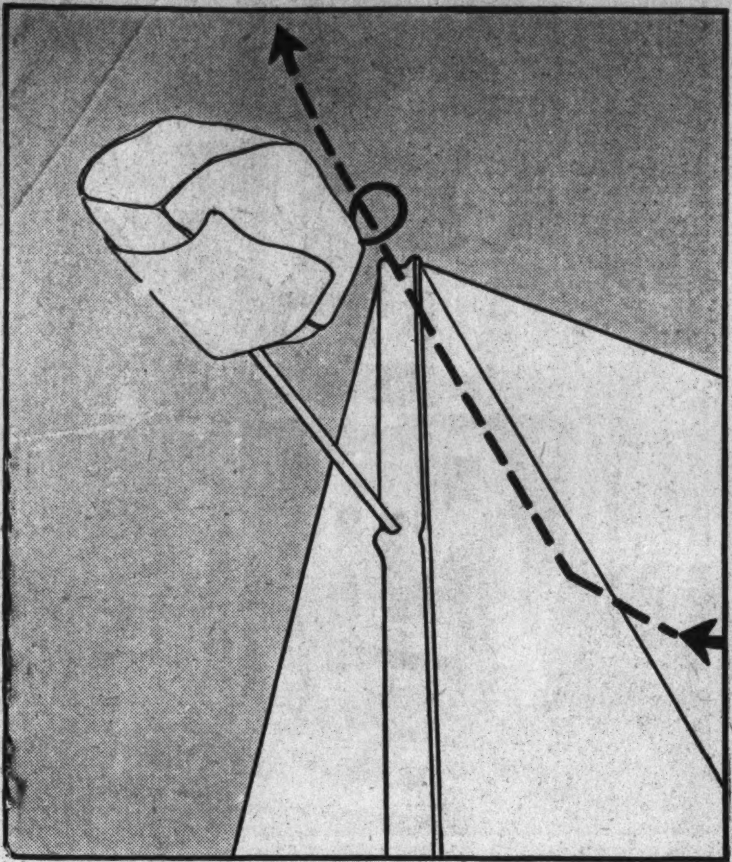
The society and college play coaching work of these producers takes them to twenty or thirty large cities in this country and Canada, and most of them during the dull season conduct schools in their home towns, where they teach their individual specialties. In some cases, these schools are their mainstays, and the society and other coaching work merely side lines; in others, the reverse is true.

The financial rewards for play coaching are sufficiently remunerative to cause one of the best known trainers of choruses for the New York stage to absent himself from time to time and undertake the coaching of society productions.

Aside from this, the young people of the cast usually bestow upon their coach some token of their appreciation . . . gifts which are sometimes a mixed blessing.

One coach, in his many years of such activities, has been presented with twenty-two fitted traveling bags . . . fitted bags always have been his idea of the very nadir in traveling equipment . . . and twenty-two of them form a substantial storage problem.

How Air Mail Is Picked Up from a Ship



A drawing showing how an apparatus installed on the deck of an ocean liner delivers a bag of mail or an express package to an airplane flying overhead. A rope dangling from the plane is dragged into this triangular device, and a hook on the end of the rope connects with a ring attached to the mail pouch. The bag then is lifted into the plane.

An air mail delivery device installed on the deck of the Leviathan. This apparatus is the invention of Dr. Lytle S. Adams of Seattle. Its value in speeding mail from a ship far at sea to land by the use of an airplane has been demonstrated on many occasions by aviators who have flown to sea to meet the approaching liner while it still was many miles from port.

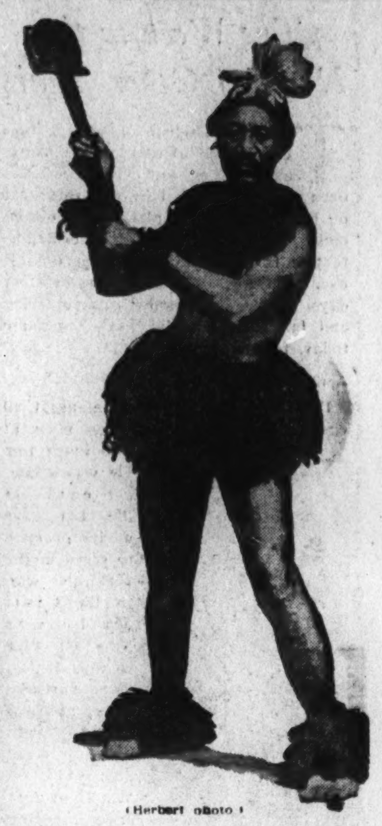
IT IS an easy matter for a railway mail clerk to deliver a bag of letters from a speeding train. He simply opens the car door and kicks the mail pouch out, to send it rolling over and over on a station platform. In a similar way it is a simple task for an air mail pilot to deliver a pouch of letters to a flying field. He hoists the bag over the side of the fuselage and drops it onto the airport below, without an instant's loss of time.

The postal service and the railroads have co-operated in producing an automatic device to snatch a bag of mail from a post and swing it into the open door of a mail car. The apparatus always works. No one nowadays marvels about it. Air mail pick-up, on the other hand, is comparatively new, so inventors still are busy trying to develop an apparatus that never misses.

Various devices have been installed at airports to provide for the taking on of mail pouches while a plane is in flight. Virtually all of the devices are patterned on the principle of a triangular trench, with the base open and the mail sack set in the apex of the triangle. The plane flies over the triangle with a rope dragging. At the end of the rope a hook is attached. The hook drags into the trench and is snapped into the apex of the device, where it connects with a ring attached to the mail bag. The bag, thus hooked, is drawn up into the plane.

Bags of mail have been picked up from the decks of ocean liners within the last few years. A modification of the land trench is built upon the ship, as is shown in the accompanying photograph. The airplane meets the liner at sea and hooks up ingoing mail through the use of the device.

A South Sea Dandy in His Hair Suit



(Herbert photo.)

THE unusual costume of the Tahiti warrior pictured here is made of human hair. It isn't recorded just how this chap acquired sufficient hair thus to decorate himself, for killing for pleasure has been tabu since the French government has ruled Tahiti, the largest and most important of the Society islands in the far South seas. The warrior pictured here is a stern and fierce appearing individual, but travelers say the women of Tahiti are the most beautiful in the South sea islands. The Tahitians are a typical Polynesian race, closely resembling the Marquesans and the Rarotongans.

Memorializing Swiss Deliverance

ONE of Switzerland's most tranquil beauty spots is Lake Geneva. The monument in the foreground recalls the fact that this country was not always as tranquil as it now appears. It was once overrun by French soldiers during the Napoleonic wars. The monument commemorates the deliverance of Switzerland from the rule of Napoleon.

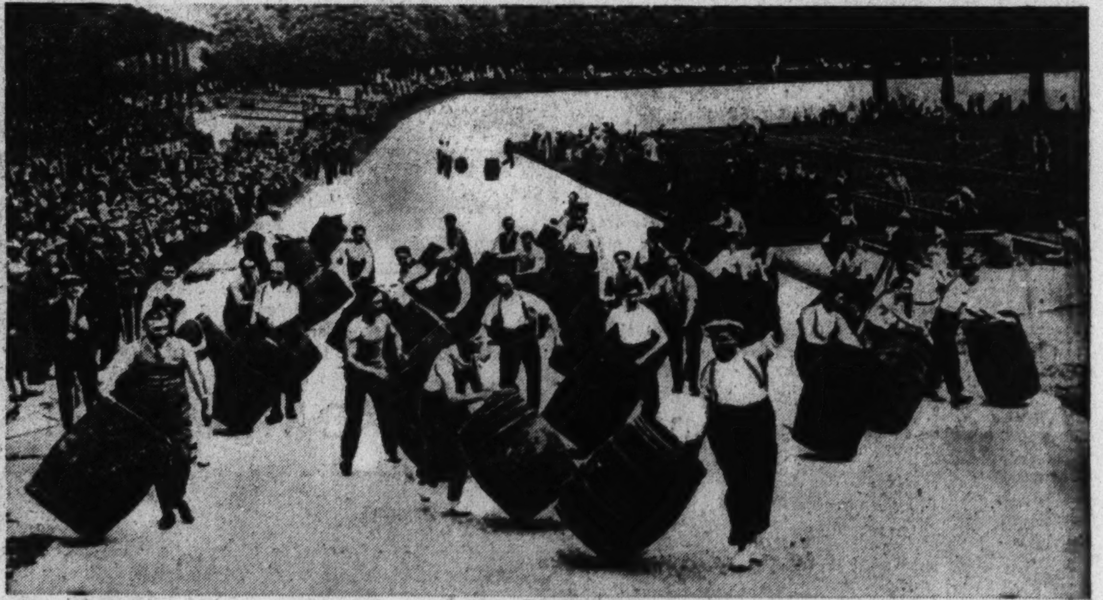
LEO SCANLON, a Pittsburgh plumber, is an amateur astronomer. Recently he drew upon his experience and ingenuity as a plumber to construct a powerful telescope almost entirely of materials used in the plumbing trade. He is shown in the accompanying picture standing beside the telescope made of plumbing pipes, brass elbows, and metal from discarded water tanks. The instrument contains a ten-inch lens, which magnifies 400 powers. A group of students of the academy of arts and sciences of Carnegie institute, headed by Scanlon, now is using the telescope to observe the movements of the stars and other heavenly bodies.

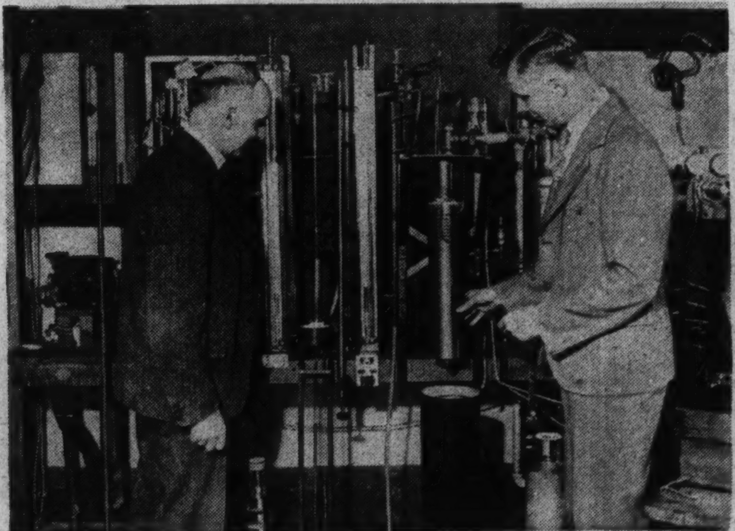
A Sporting Event of the Vintner's Holiday



(Chicago Tribune photo.)

ONE of the most sprightly events in French sporting circles is the barrel rolling contest which is held annually in the velodrome at Paris. Wine workers demonstrate their skill at maneuvering barrels over a 2,000 meter course at high speed while a large and enthusiastic gathering of Parisiens watches and applauds. The participants get as much fun out of it as do the spectators. The three-legged race and the sack race at school picnics have nothing on this event for unexpected developments. Many a contestant will be on the verge of victory when he will lose control of his barrel and become an also-ran. Collisions and spills are as frequent and almost exciting as they are in the Grand National steeplechase.

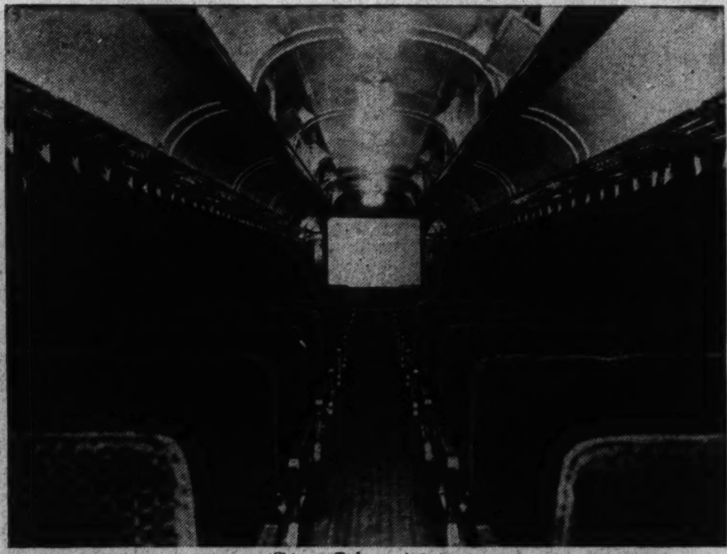
Producing Liquid Helium



(Acme photo.)

HELIUM, that rare gas, which is the lightest of all gases, except hydrogen, and which is used in American navy dirigibles because of its extreme buoyancy and because it is non-inflammable, has been liquefied for the first time in the United States, at the Bureau of Standards, Washington, D. C. The accompanying picture shows two of the scientists of the bureau making liquid helium. Liquefaction of the rare element was accomplished by boiling it at low pressure at a temperature of 450 degrees below zero, Fahrenheit. The resultant substance is being saved for experimental purposes. Liquid helium previously had been produced in university laboratories in Holland, London, and Toronto.

Talkies Travel on the Train



(Chicago Tribune photo.)

TALKIES break the monotony of travel on this train. A movie screen is set up at one end of the car and a speaker is installed in the ceiling. In a compartment at the other end of the car is a projector. Passengers may gather here in the evening and spend an hour or two in the enjoyment of a picture while speeding across country. The apparatus has been installed in one of the cars of a Chicago and North Western train which runs between Minneapolis and Chicago. Thus one of the methods of entertainment common on ocean liners has been adapted to rail travel, in the continuous effort of transportation officials to make the task of getting from here to there as pleasant as possible.

Skulls of Prehistoric Ponies

ALTHOUGH the horse of the modern day was introduced into America by the Spanish conquistadors at a comparatively recent date, there were prehistoric horses in the western world millions of years before man. Pictured here is H. N. Boss of the Smithsonian institution, in Washington, preparing skulls of two prehistoric horses for exhibition purposes. The smaller of the two skulls is that of a miniature horse which lived in the territory of what is now Wyoming 19,000,000 years ago. The larger skull is that of a horselike creature that ranged North America 7,000,000 years ago.

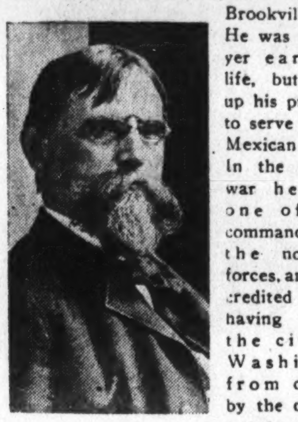
"The Front Page" of History

The Week in the News of Other Years

TO THE student of history time is a parade of events, with causes and results, and civilization has been existent for so long that there are no blank spaces any place in its chronology. Every day in the year is important as the anniversary of some notable event of the past. "Spot" news of other days, as recalled through anniversaries, and falling within the week beginning today, follows:

April 10

1827—Gen. Lew Wallace, famous Civil war leader and author, was born at Brookville, Ind. He was a lawyer early in life, but gave up his practice to serve in the Mexican war. In the Civil war he was one of the commanders of the northern forces, and was credited with having saved the city of Washington from capture by the confederate leader, Early. He served as American minister to Turkey from 1881 to 1885, and died at Crawfordsville, Ind., Feb 15, 1905 His most famous books were: "The Fair God," "The Prince of India," and "Ben Hur."



Lew Wallace

1829—William Booth, founder of the Salvation Army, was born at Nottingham, England. He became a revivalist at the age of 15, and in 1852 was ordained a minister. In 1864 he established a mission in London, which, in 1878, became the Salvation Army. There was much opposition to the Salvation Army in Britain in its early days, but soon it was recognized as a great beneficial agency. The movement spread rapidly to America and other countries. Booth died in 1912.

April 11

1689—William III. and Mary were crowned joint sovereigns of Great Bri[illegible]n. William was born at The Hague Nov. 4, 1650, and was the son of William II., prince of Orange and stadtholder of the Dutch republic. William III. married Mary, the eldest daughter of James, duke of York, who afterward became James II. It was this marriage that eventually brought the Dutch prince to the throne of England. William died March 8, 1702.

1814—Napoleon Bonaparte abdicated as emperor of France at Fontainebleau, at the urgings of his marshals. Napoleon left France and went to Elba, as emperor of that small island, and Louis XVIII. returned to Paris. Less than eleven months after his abdication, Napoleon re-entered France, and then began the famous "hundred days," which led to his defeat at Waterloo and his exile to St. Helena.

April 12

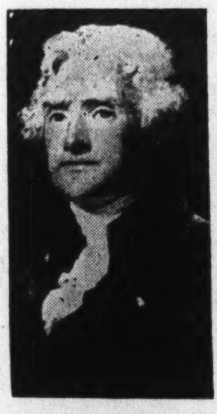
1777—Henry Clay, famous American statesman, was born in Hanover county, Virginia. He was admitted to the bar in Richmond in 1797, and the following year moved to Lexington, Ky., to practice law. At the age of 29 he was appointed to fill an unexpired term in the senate. Later he was reappointed to fill another unexpired term in the upper house, and in 1811 he was elected to the house of representatives and chosen as the speaker of that body He served as speaker from 1811 to 1814, from 1815 to 1820, and from 1823 to 1825 Clay was secretary of state under John Quincy Adams. He was in the senate from 1831 until 1842, and was a presidential candidate in nearly every campaign from 1824 to 1848. He died in Washington June 29, 1849 Clay was a slaveholder Though he professed to be opposed to slavery he was ever a bitter enemy of the abolitionists.

1861—Confederate forces began the bombardment of Fort Sumter in the harbor of Charleston, South Carolina It was the first actually hostile act of the Civil war.

April 13

1598—Henry IV., king of France, signed the Edict of Nantes, by which his Protestant subjects, the Huguenots were granted religious and civil liberties. Under the edict the Huguenots were given the right to hold public worship in certain cities, one hundred "places of safety" were set aside for them, and their pastors were paid out of government funds. The edict was revoked Oct. 18, 1685.

1743—Thomas Jefferson, third President of the United States, was born at Shadwell, Albemarle county, Virginia He served as a member of congress, as governor of Virginia, as minister to France, as secretary of state and as Vice President. His terms as President were from 1801 to 1809. He drafted and wrote the Declaration of Independence. He died at Monticello July 4, 1826. Jefferson probably gave the world more broad principles of government than any other man.



Thomas Jefferson.

1904—The Russian flagship Petropavlovsk was sunk by a mine off Port Arthur as it was returning to that harbor from the pursuit of Japanese cruisers, prior to the capture of Port Arthur by the Japanese in the Russo-Japanese war. Between 600 and 700 sailors lost their lives, including Vice Admiral Stephan O. Makaroff, the outstanding Russian naval commander of his day.

April 14

1471—The decisive battle of Barnet, of the War of Roses, was fought. The War of Roses was a series of civil wars in England during the reigns of Henry VI., Edward IV., and Richard III. The Earl of Warwick, "the king maker," was slain in the battle of Barnet.

1861—Union forces evacuated Fort Sumter after a bombardment by the confederates.

1905—The body of John Paul Jones, revolutionary naval hero, was found in a forgotten grave in the St. Louis cemetery for foreign Protestants in Paris. The body was placed in a crypt at the Naval academy at Annapolis in 1913. Jones, whose original name was John Paul, was born in Kirkcudbright, Scotland. He appeared under the name of Jones at Philadelphia in 1775 and was given a commission in the American navy. His most famous engagement was that in which he commanded the Bonhomme Richard when it opposed the British man-of-war Serapis. Jones died in Paris in 1792.

April 15

1912—The White Star liner Titanic sunk in mid-Atlantic. (An illustrated feature on this subject appears on another page of The Graphic Weekly.)

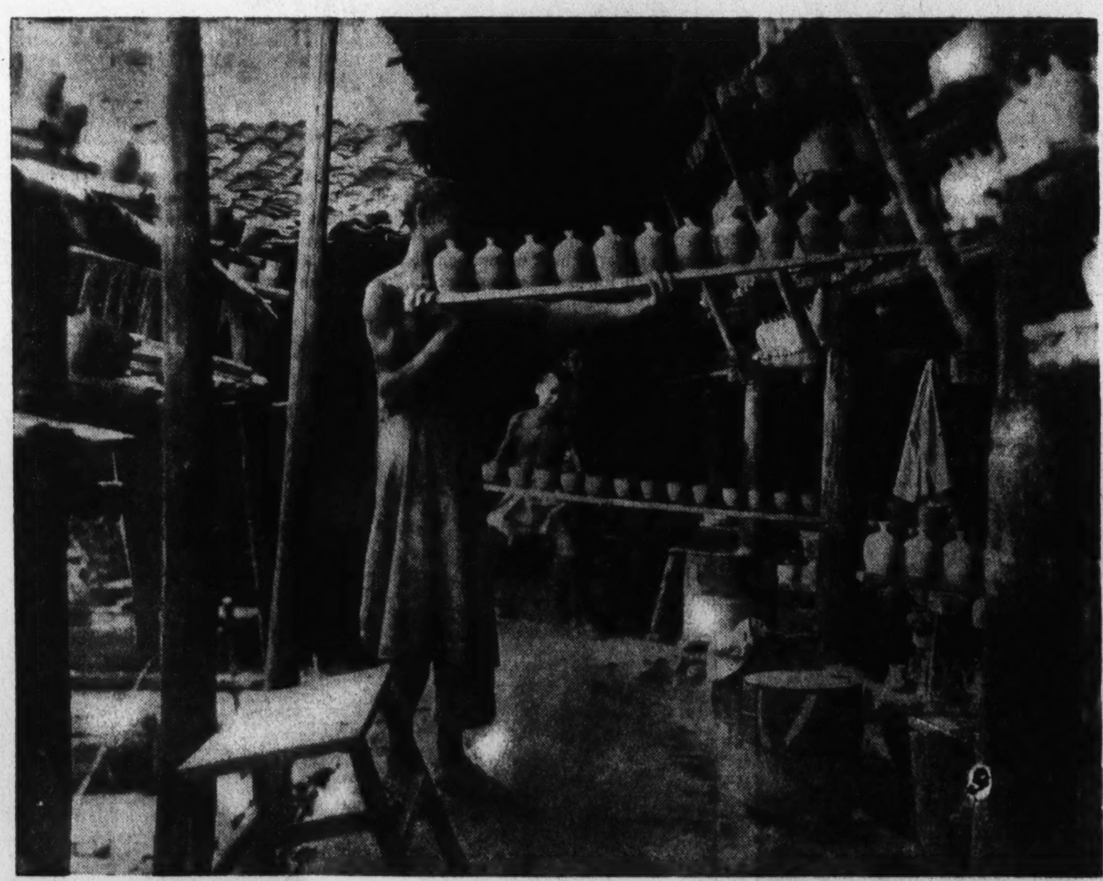
April 16

1746—A British force under the duke of Cumberland defeated an army of Scottish highlanders under Charles Edward, the pretender, at the battle of Culloden, in Inverness-shire, Scotland.

1854—San Salvador, capital of the republic of Salvador, was destroyed by an earthquake. San Salvador recently was the scene of another terrible earthquake in which there was great loss of life.

1862—France declared war on the Mexican leader, Juarez. The following year French troops occupied Mexico City. Maximilian of Austria was placed on the throne of Mexico as a result of French occupation, but in 1867 Juarez was victorious in re-establishing the republic. Maximilian was executed June 19, 1867.

A Pottery Kiln in an Old Chinese City

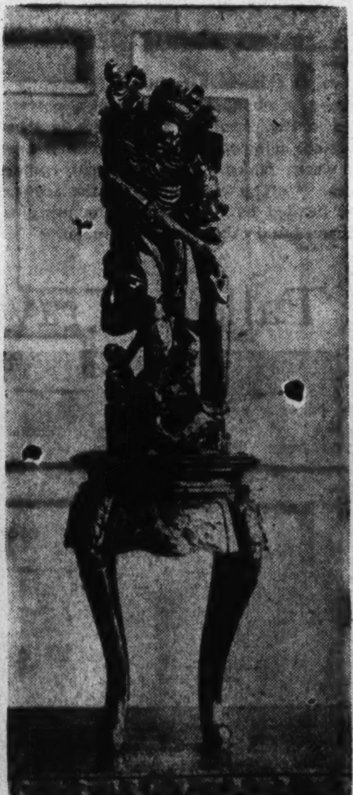


Acme photo

WHEN the Ching dynasty of the Manchus replaced the Ming dynasty in China in 1664 the business of making artistic pottery was given great encouragement. Ching pottery pieces produced in the period from 1680 to 1749 are considered today among the finest ever to come out of the Orient. That period was the most fertile in the annals of Chinese ceramics. At the imperial porcelain factory at Ching-te Chen wares were produced of splendid materials, beautiful in coloring and marvelous in technique. When Ching-te Chen was devastated during the Taiping rebellion in 1853 it was looked upon as the crowning disaster of the ceramic industry. Ching-te Chen never recovered as the artistic capital of the Chinese pottery business, though today much stoneware and earthenware are produced in that old city along the lines employed by the workmen of centuries ago.

Pictured here is an interior view of a present-day Ching-te Chen pottery kiln. The pottery shown in the picture has been modeled by expert potters, and is being placed on shelves to dry, preliminary to glazing and firing. The workers in the kilns begin their employment at an early age, and often spend their entire lives at these labors, for which they are paid only a meager wage.

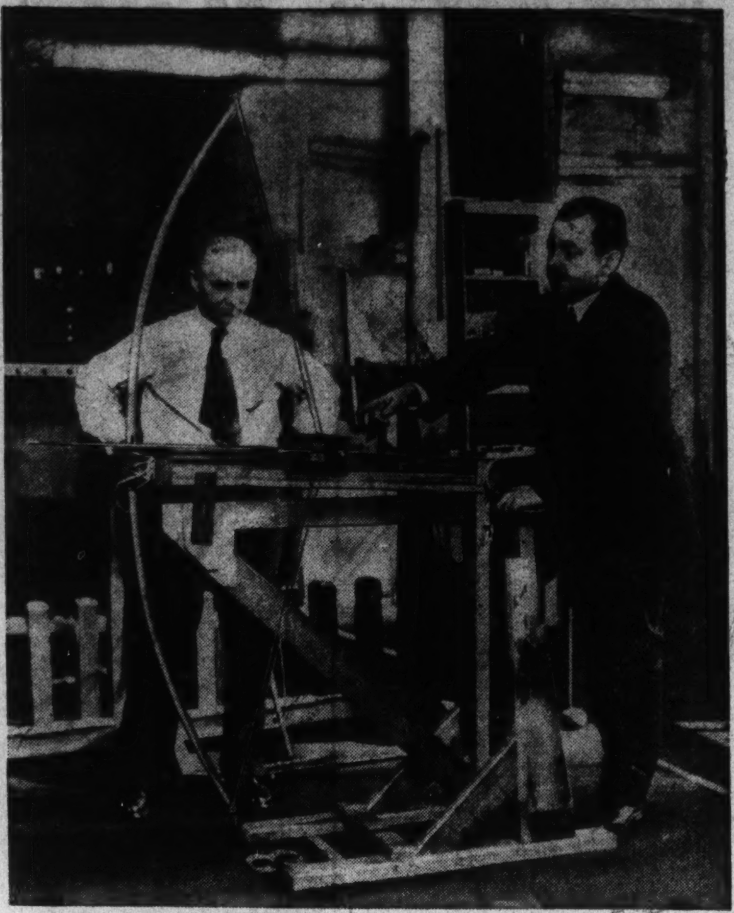
A Carved Idol of Ancient Java



[illegible] photo

THIS highly decorative product of oriental craftsmanship was found in one of the temples on the island of Java. It is believed to be very old and reflects to a remarkable degree the skill of the artist who carved it. The entire statue was laboriously and delicately shaped by hand and is believed to have been used as an idol. At an early stage in history, the art of carving was far advanced in the east and some of the ancient work has never been surpassed.

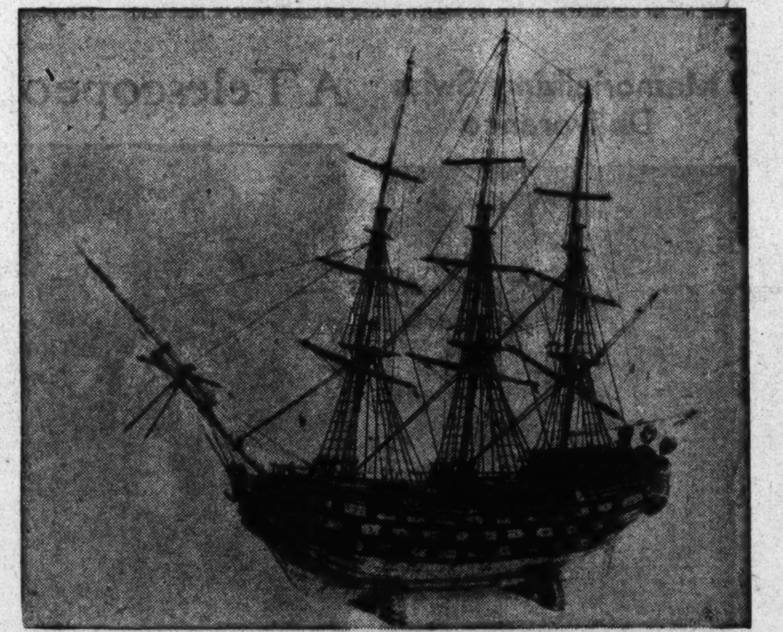
Testing Arrows Mechanically



[illegible] Tribune photo

HERE is a device which medieval militarists would have put to good use but which is several hundred years too late to be of any practical value for warlike purposes. Nevertheless it is hailed as a handy device to help sporting goods manufacturers turn out better arrows for the benefit of archery enthusiasts. It tests the accuracy with which each missile is machined and serves as a guide to determine the most efficient length and thickness of the arrows for each style of bow. This machine also provides the manufacturers with a checkup on the quantity and style of feathering which will make for the greatest accuracy.

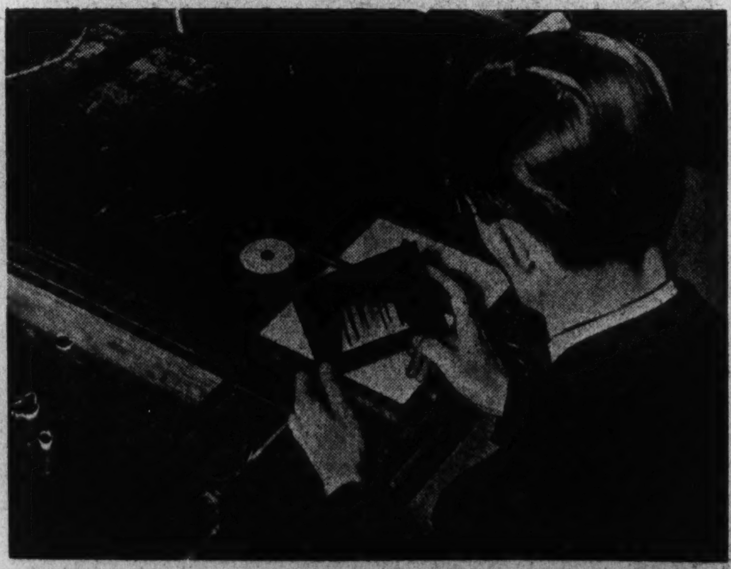
A Ship's Model of Fish Bones



(Acme photo.)

MODEL ship building is a hobby indulged in by schoolboys and even by grown men throughout the whole civilized world. There is scarcely a mantelpiece that cannot boast at least one ship's model, as the result of the craze which was revived in this country within the last few years. Model ship builders usually work in wood, though some have used plastic materials and cardboard to obtain effects desired. A British sailor working out of Hull, England, on a vessel of a North sea fishing fleet, recently constructed a model barque entirely of the bones of fish. The model, which is shown in the accompanying picture, was presented to a museum at Hull.

Light on Abstruse Problems



HERE is a calculating machine which literally throws light on a problem, solving it in a fraction of the time required for computation by ordinary means. The problem is stated in terms of a graph, cut out as illustrated. This graph is placed in the machine, where it is exposed to the action of light rays. The effect of the rays varies with the form of the graph. The machine then draws the answer in the shape of another graph on a moving table. Thus a problem which might have required hours of study by an engineer with slide rule and table of logarithms is solved in a few minutes. The machine is known as the photo-electric integraph and was invented recently by Dr. Truman Gray of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology

DID BOOTH ESCAPE?

Sixty-seven Years After the Assassination of Lincoln, the Myth Still Persists That His Assassin Got Away

By Frederic Babcock

THERE has been running lately in New York a play, entitled "If Booth Had Missed," giving an imaginative account of what might have taken place if Abraham Lincoln had been spared the assassin's bullet. In that event, it appears, the President would have served through two more fearful years, only to be impeached, acquitted, and then shot down by another fanatic. If Lincoln had lived, the play points out, he would have been defenseless against the destroying influences of greed and self-interest and cheap political conspiracies.

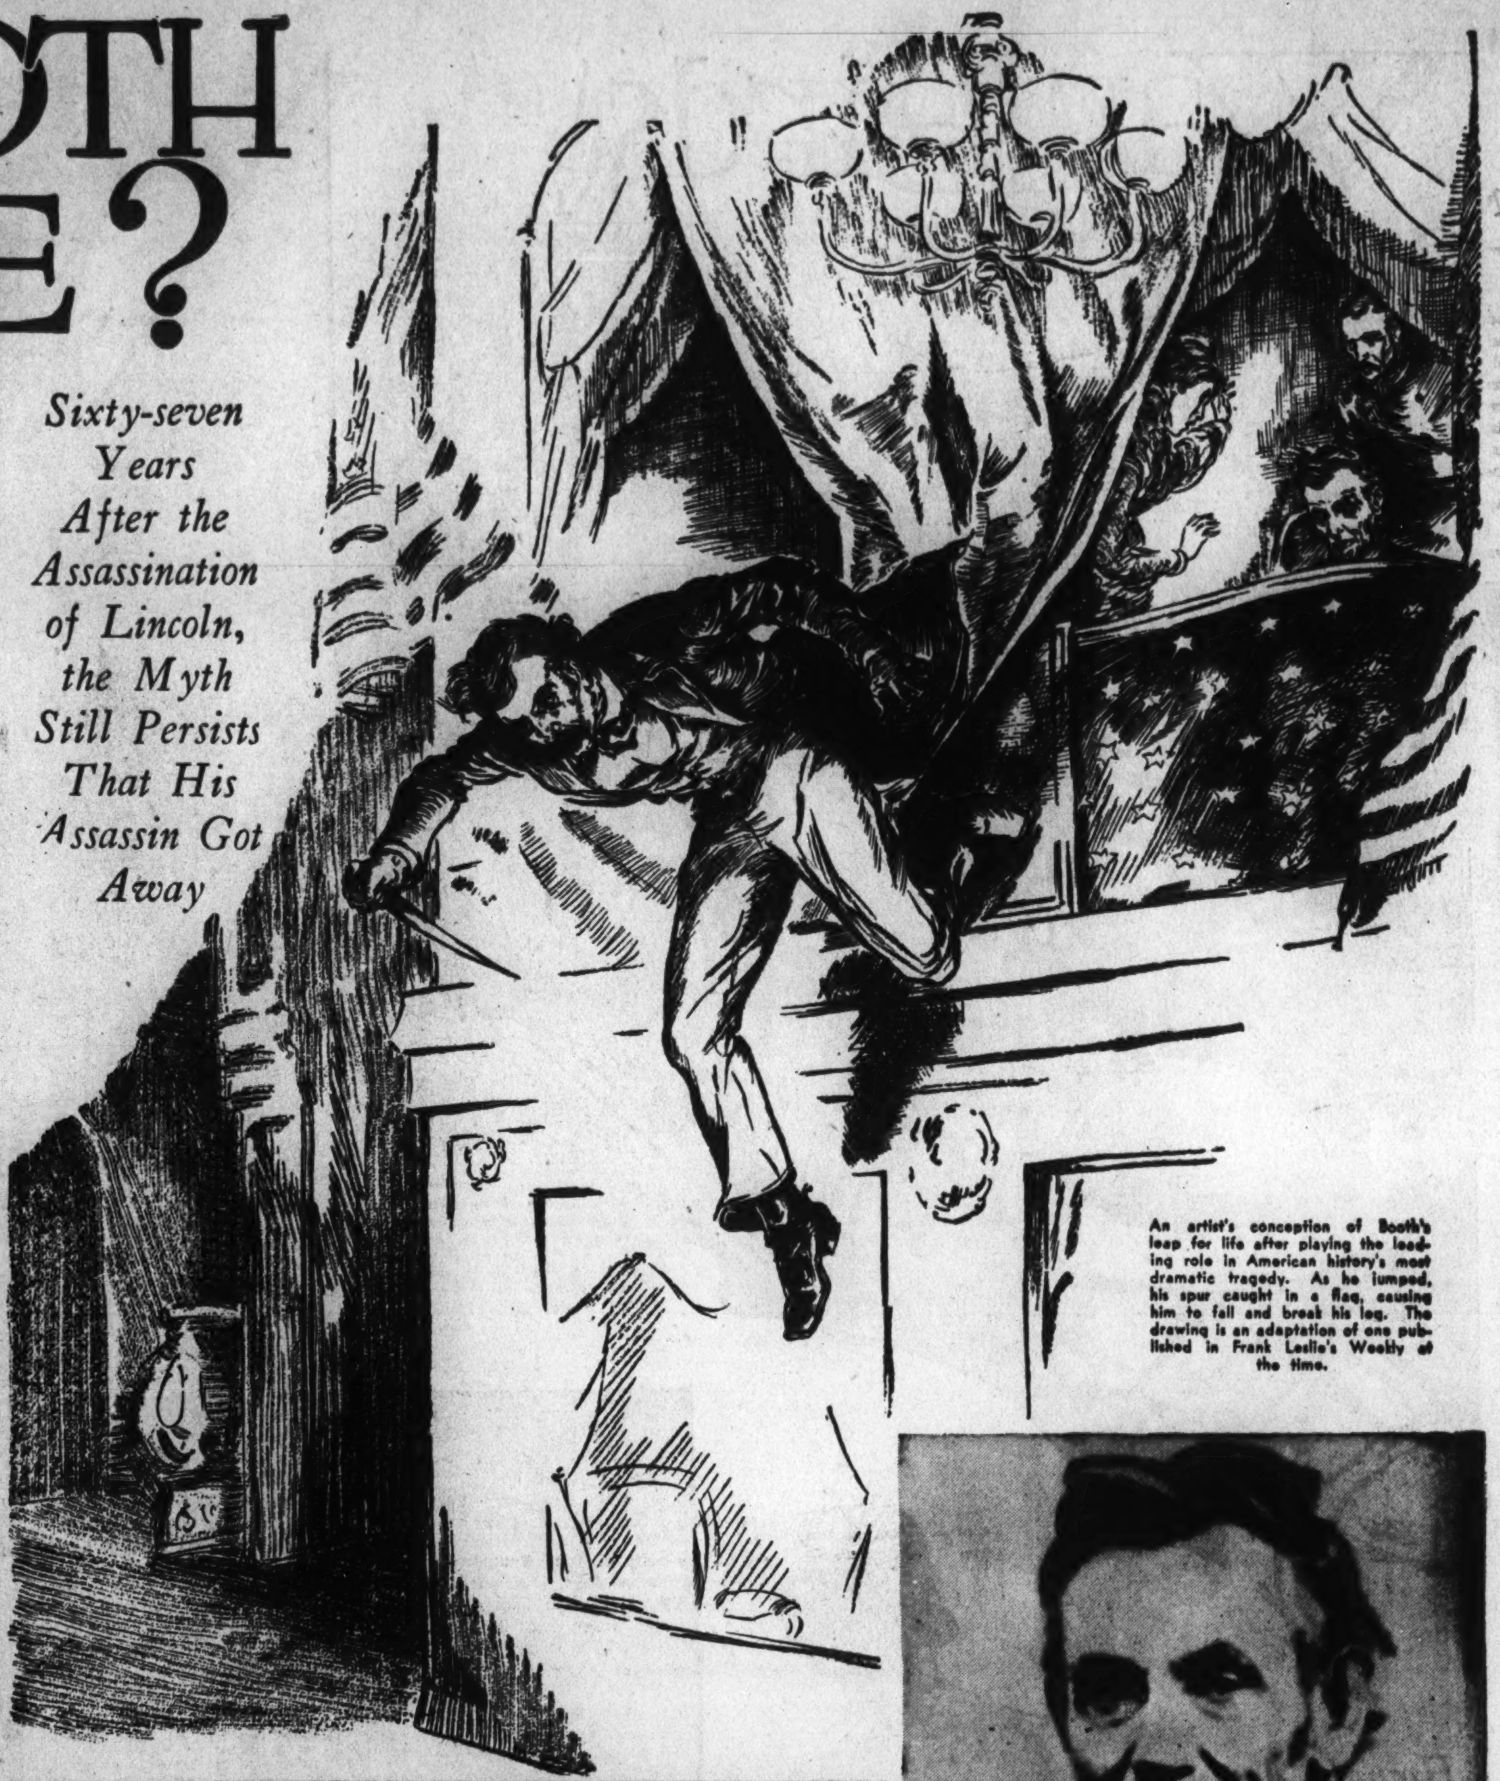
It's a provocative theme, but the question that more deeply interests millions of Americans, and has interested them for years, is: Did Booth escape? And the answer is: Probably not.

Ever since the events immediately following the tragic day of April 14, 1865—sixty-seven years ago next Thursday—controversy has raged as to what happened to John Wilkes Booth after he shot down the President, broke his leg in leaping from Lincoln's box to the stage in Ford's theater in Washington, and fled on horseback. The generally accepted account is that he was tracked to a barn near Bowling Green, Va., by federal troops and fatally wounded after the barn had been set afire. But after all these years there are those who still insist that Booth escaped; that the body of another was substituted to cover up the soldiers' blunder, and that Booth lived until after the turn of the twentieth century.

In the course of the sixty-seven years no fewer than five "skulls" of the actor-assassin have been exhibited over the country, and no fewer than twenty "Booths" have gone to whatever reward awaits them for having put an end to the career of one of America's greatest characters. As recently as last December the mummy that has gone the rounds of the sideshows for twenty years or more was positively identified in Chicago as the body of the misguided zealot.

Twenty-eight years ago a man who had been living in Enid, Okla., under the name of John St. Helen committed suicide after confessing that he was Booth. It is related that this man was a dope fiend and a drunkard, and that whenever he got under the influence he was inclined to grow loud in his claims. The mummy that has been exhibited since is admittedly that of St. Helen, but the question is whether St. Helen was Booth. History is filled with impostors who have claimed to be dauphins, princes, assassins—anybody who has died suddenly or mysteriously.

The question in this instance hangs on this more or less slender thread: X-rays have revealed that St. Helen bore wounds and fractures similar to those known to have been suffered by Booth, and it has been found that he swallowed the top of a signet ring inscribed with either a B or an S—nobody seems to know which. The hypothesis is that, if it is a B, Booth may have swallowed it to hide his identity at one time when he was near capture. If, on the other hand, the letter is an S, it stands for St. Helen, and the whole theory evaporates into nothingness. But in that case why did he swallow it? Every one is permitted to write his own answer.



An artist's conception of Booth's leap for life after playing the leading role in American history's most dramatic tragedy. As he jumped, his spur caught in a flag, causing him to fall and break his leg. The drawing is an adaptation of one published in Frank Leslie's Weekly at the time.

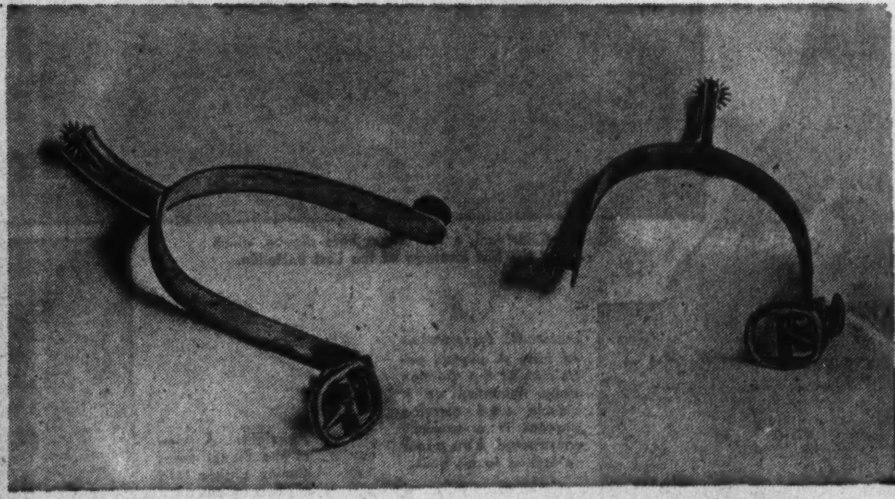
John Wilkes Booth. This, the last photograph ever taken of him, was made by Lusby in Baltimore just four days before the actor shot Lincoln.



The spurs that caused Booth's downfall and momentarily checked him in his mad flight. It was by one of the strangest of Fate's many strange whims that it was a flag that tripped him up immediately after the assassination.

Booth's band of conspirators. These eight persons were accused of being accomplices in the amazing plot to abduct Lincoln.

That isn't the only mystery connected with the passing of Booth. History says his body was buried under the floor of an arsenal warehouse in Washington, and later removed to Baltimore and buried in the family plot in Greenmount cemetery. Yet as late as 1925 an 82-year-old Civil war veteran, Edward Harper Simpson of Moline, Ill., carried with him to his grave what he insisted was the real secret of Booth's disposal. If Simpson's story is to be believed, he and another secret service agent did away with the body at midnight on the night of the killing in the barn, and forever after refused to tell what they had done with it.

Many volumes have been written and vast fables have grown around the Lincoln-Booth tragedy, perhaps the most dramatic in American history. One of the most reliable accounts is given by Francis Wilson in his book, "John Wilkes Booth." A few excerpts from his treatise might tend to clear up some of the disputed points. First, the assassination:

"Once inside the passageway, Booth acts swiftly. He quickly bars the door securely from all intrusion and, making sure by peeping through a hole cut previously that all is as he wishes, he enters the box, closes in upon the President, cries 'Sic semper tyrannis,' and fires a bullet into Lincoln's brain. The great war President, the mighty man of the age, sinks almost imperceptibly into unconsciousness, from which he never recovers. Now, indeed, all his cares, all his vast responsibilities, all his troubles are at an end."

Mr. Wilson goes on to tell how Booth then dropped his derringer and drew a "villainous looking, broad-bladed dagger," and, as Maj. Rathbone leaped to seize him, stabbed at the major's breast. Mounting the rail of the box, Booth jumped toward the stage, ten or fifteen feet below. But here he had his first mishap. One of the spurs of his riding boots caught in the flag which draped the box, and so diverted the angle of his leap that he landed with one leg under him in such a way as to break a bone about two inches above the ankle. He was quickly on his feet again, and, with dagger in hand, he dashed across the stage and out through the wings to temporary freedom. The audience made no move; it thought the shot and the leap were a part of the play.

Mr. Wilson relates that from the moment Booth entered the box, shot the President, leaped to the stage, passed out the rear door of the theater, mounted his horse, fled southward across the line into Maryland and thence into Virginia, and was surrounded in the Garrett barn, "where he was shot, or shot himself rather than surrender," every moment has been traced and accounted for.

"There seems no possibility of the chance that he eluded his captors," says this chronicler; "no chance of any one, even if he had been fool enough to wish to do such a thing unprotestingly, purposely or accidentally stepping in to be shot instead of Booth."

Yet that is precisely the story that has been whispered about ever since. Booth left the Garrett house the night before the arrival of the soldiers in search of him, say the whisperers. He sent a certain "Ruddy" back for articles lost, and "Ruddy" was shot, or shot himself rather than yield.

"One would feel like giving three loud and ringing cheers for this 'Ruddy,'" writes Mr. Wilson, "if, in a burst of patriotic exaltation, he had stepped in and allowed himself to be sacrificed for the man who had struck a blow for his, 'Ruddy's,' southland and effected that man's escape. It would prove this 'Ruddy' to be a brave if mistaken patriot. But no such escape was possible. No such escape was made, and the 'Ruddy' here spoken of was proved to be alive many years after his alleged death in the Virginia barn."

That would seem to be conclusive enough, but it has not stopped those who thrive on the grotesque and the morbid. John St. Helen, who "declared that he had eluded the vigilance of thousands of soldiers and many detectives, but, struck with remorse for the horrible deed he had committed, he must make confession to some one to ease his mind," was not the only one. Other Booths bobbed up from time to time. The myth persists, and gathers strength with the years.

War Birds

How the Army's Homing Pigeons Cover Themselves with Glory as Heroes of Battle and Peace

EDITOR'S NOTE: The author of this unusual article, a first lieutenant in the Signal corps, stationed at Fort Monmouth, has collected his facts from official army sources.

By Lieut. Carter W. Clarke

IN THIS day of radio, television, and black light there is sometimes a tendency among members of the military profession to underrate the humble homing pigeon as an agency of signal communication, but a more positive or reliable means is yet to be found.

The Signal corps, that arm of the service which furnishes signal communication to the remainder of our army, is thoroughly alive to the great importance of these feathered couriers and maintains at Fort Monmouth, New Jersey, a large breeding and training loft for military homing pigeons.

While the earliest record of pigeons kept under domestication dates to the fifth Egyptian dynasty, about 3000 B. C., and pigeons with the homing instinct were utilized for carrying the names of Olympic victors to their various Grecian cities, the American public first became really pigeon conscious through the exploits of Cher Ami, the game little courier which carried the last message from the Lost Battalion.

At left: A pigeon patrolman of the German army, mounted on a bicycle and carrying pigeons in a specially constructed knapsack attached to his back.

Thousands of tales could be told of the exploits of homing pigeons during the four years of fighting along the northern fringe of France, but only a few of them have been left to posterity. The complete history of these birds is untold; it is only hinted at in the cryptic statements of official messages It is only by interpreting the actual truth behind the undramatic language of official war department documents that the real drama of these creatures, gentle doves of the battlefield, is appreciated.

Cher Ami, President Wilson, Cuiss Bill, Big Tom, and Kaja Boy, whose exploits are widely known, have winged their way to that Valhalla where all good homing pigeons sooner or later go; but their comrades, Spike and Mocker, still are hale and hearty despite their advanced age of fifteen years. They are the delight of school children and parents who visit the Signal corps lofts at Fort Monmouth by the hundred each year.

Mocker, when younger, was a red check cock with a beauty which even his war wounds could not entirely destroy. His citation for gallantry in action is well worthy of emulation by every American soldier. This citation reads: "With his eye destroyed by a shell splinter and his head a welter of clotted blood, this game pigeon homed in splendid time from the vicinity of Beaumont early in the morning of Sept. 12, 1918, bearing a message of great importance which gave the location of certain enemy heavy batteries. This information enabled the American artillery to silence the enemy's guns within twenty minutes." Mocker still serves the government by transmitting his courageous blood to two or more fine youngsters each season.

Spike never was a handsome bird, but he is the ideal type for signal communications service. He was bred in France, of uncertain pedigree. He is a strong, aggressive, fast flying bird with great vitality and capacity for endurance. There is no definite official record of the service rendered by this remarkable pigeon, but he is known to have delivered fifty-two messages in action during the World war. Spike has reared several fine youngsters, including Sunnybrook, a 1926 championship winner and runner-up for the 1927 army relief derby.

Sharing the spotlight with Spike and Mocker is their erstwhile enemy, Rheingold, the only surviving captured German World war pigeon. This beautiful bird was one of a number captured from the Germans in their hasty retreat from the Argonne. Rheingold sports a leg band which bears the imperial German crest. He is spending his last days in the same loft with Spike and Mocker.

Symbolical of peace, these gallant veterans are treated with the respect their valiant deeds have earned them. The soldier pigeoneers at Fort Monmouth no longer impose any duties upon them, and no effort is spared to make their last days peaceful.

Since the war Fort Monmouth has been the central breeding and training center for our army's pigeons. Some of the finest birds in the country have been bred there. In fact, the peacetime exploits of some of the Fort Monmouth pigeons equal in courage, fortitude, and endurance those of the World war hero birds.

Among these are Molly Pitcher, a winner of two 400-mile races, and Florence Nightingale, a 750-mile prize winning racer. These two speedy little couriers were released on different occasions from the top of Lookout mountain, Tennessee, for flights to Fort Monmouth.

Molly Pitcher, after an absence of 24 days, badly wounded in a fight with a hawk, her strength almost spent, finally fluttered into the lofts at Fort Monmouth. Although so seriously was she injured that she never again will fly, she is yet serving her country, and her posterity will win fame and honors.

Florence Nightingale was A. W. O. L. just 23 days when, bleeding, with one wing useless or nearly so, she hobbled home to her aviary. After her release from Lookout mountain she started eastward over the Tennessee mountains and was shot by some hunter, and from the condition of her wounds when she finally reached Fort Monmouth, it was evident that the tragedy occurred almost at the beginning of the flight. With three wounds in her right wing and a fourth through her breast, this brave little soldier found her way home, crossing mountain ranges, rivers, woods, and cities.

Another noted Fort Monmouth pigeon which earned peacetime fame is DO-X. This bird was sent on a round trip to Europe on the Leviathan. The Signal corps planned to train birds to fly over a water route of about 200 miles, and this bird was selected for the first experiment.

The ordinary period of "settling" for well trained birds in a new location is about ten days, and while it was expected that the Leviathan would be away from these shores about fourteen days, the pigeoneers had no doubts that the bird would return to its home loft.

On this particular trip, however, the Leviathan was out seventeen days, and the pigeoneers at Fort Monmouth had little hope that DO-X would return. Nevertheless, he was released from the liner at sunrise one morning when the ship was just 100 miles off the Jersey coast, and without hesitation he headed straight for his home loft at Fort Monmouth.

In addition to the ordinary day flying pigeons, the Signal corps pigeoneers at Fort Monmouth have developed an entirely new race of night flyers. It has long been known that the homing power of the homing pigeon is not entirely instinctive and unchangeable, but that it can be modified and developed within certain limits by careful training. With this in mind, the Signal corps undertook to breed a race of night flyers, using as parent stock ordinary homing pigeons which had exhibited a tendency to home in the late evening or when it was about dark.

The training of these night flyers is quite different from that of their day flying cousins. The young squeakers are never permitted outside the loft in the daytime, but at twilight they are taken out, carried a few feet from the loft, and coaxed back by the sound of peas shaken in a pail.

As soon as they can fly they are taken a little farther away and again lured home. Each night they are taken farther and farther away, until presently they are able to fly unerringly five miles on the darkest nights. There are a few birds at Fort Monmouth that can fly consistently sixteen miles at night, but these are exceptions.

Maple peas from Australia, field peas from Canada, yellow corn from Kansas, and corn from the Argentine constitute the army pigeons' "chow" on ordinary days. But when they are good and have made an unusually successful flight they get a tidbit of hemp seed, and on really grand days they receive a portion of canary seed.

Blood Is Thicker

By Henry C. Rowland

A Diverting Short Story with an O. Henry Ending . . . In Which a Kansan Voyages to France to Kidnap the Orphaned Children of His Flyer Brother

THERE was an exodus of them straggling down to the sea from all parts of Europe; agents, brokers, buyers, promoters. They were unlike a corvee, which conveys the idea of a working party, because they were neither in a party nor at work, but job-loose if not entirely footloose.

Miss Arden Geddin found herself in both of these circumstances when the Travel Bureau on the Rue de la Paix gave half its personnel indefinite vacation without pay. The position had been found her by an uncle who was an ex-professor of ancient history and had of latter years conducted select parties of tourists through the Holy Land.

At least, Arden had perfected her French and been able to let her tiny independent income accumulate during the thirty months of her business engagement in Paris. Now that it was finished she disliked to return to her home in Cambridge, Mass., without seeing something of the country that she had so far traveled only on the map with the tip of her pencil.

To think out her plans she went for a walk in the Bois, and in the Jardin d'Acclimatation seated herself on a bench which presently was shared by a young man who, though well dressed, suggested the handsome but ungallant male figure of the Civic Virtue group in City Hall park, N. Y. Arden liked his appearance and was not offended when presently he swung around toward her and asked, "Do you mind if I speak to you? It's sort of tiresome to go all day without a word, or even understanding the patter round you."

"Touring a foreign country alone is dull," she agreed.

"Yes, all there seems to do is to eat and sleep and look. Where do you live, at home?"

"Cambridge, Mass. Let's see if I can guess your state. California?"

"Wrong. Shawnee county, Kansas. I'm a farmer. Like to make things grow."

"It's lucky for the rest of us that a good many people do."

He laughed. "That answer's right, anyhow. My name is Jean MacMahon."

She told him her own, which he acknowledged with a slight bow, and said, "I'm a sort of experimental farmer; trying to work out some of the stuff learned at agricultural college."

"Are you going to study French farming methods?" she asked.

"Not this trip." His face clouded. He was uncommonly good looking in the way that Arden most liked; strong and lean, with features that were well balanced and cleanly cut. "I'm over here on family business. There's been a hitch to make a week's delay, so I'm killing time the best I can."

"That ought not to be so hard, in Paris."

"Cities are not my stuff. I brought over a new car to get 'round in handier, and the Line fixed things up for me at Havre, so there's been no trouble."

He changed the topic abruptly. "Maybe you'd like to take a little ride—if you don't mind my being a stranger. I'm not the kind that gets fresh, though."

She laughed. "What about me? I might be a dangerous adventuress."

He said dryly, "You could be dangerous, all right, but not that way."

THE answer pleased her. They went over and got into his car, which was not a big one but high powered and new. On the road to St. Cloud she told him that she was planning to make a little tour before returning to America, where she would try to find some sort of business position.

They drove on to St. Germain, where Arden agreed to have supper with him at the Pavillon Blue on condition that she pay her own check. "It's the custom in Europe," she told him, "and I ought to stand my share of the gas, too."

"Nothing doing. My car's under the American flag. I've been thinking. Why can't we drive round and do our sight seeing together? Not much fun alone."

"That's kind of you," she said, "but I've looked Paris over and want to see the chateaux down the Loire, then swing over into Brittany, Finisterre."

He gave her a quick look. "I've got to go down there. This family stuff I spoke about."

"But you said you wanted to see Paris first."

"Yes, because, if things work out like I hope, there won't be much chance to see anything afterwards—unless it's the inside of a French jail."

"Why should you get in jail?" Arden asked.

"For kidnaping a pair of twins. Not that it's likely, but I'm not dropping everything and coming all this way to go home skunked." His square face set still more squarely than its habitual shape of firm but pleasing determination.

"Whose twins are they?" Arden asked.

"That's what it's all about. My brother Patrick was a flyer in the war, and afterwards he stayed here and got into airplane construction and married a French girl, name of Gilly Neck——"

"Guillenec? That sounds Breton."

"Right. Her family are good people but hard up, I guess, like lots of others over here since the war. Her father and mother are a count and countess and live in an old chateau down in Brittany. The twins were born nearly four years ago——"

"The first children?"

"No, there was a baby that died. A year ago Pat and his wife were killed when their plane crashed."

She nodded. "I remember now."

"Well, dad and mama want those twins the worst way, and their French grandparents won't give 'em up."

"It's pretty hard to blame them," Arden said.

"Yeah, but it looks to us as if there was some graft in it. Dad is a fairly rich man, even for Topeka, and he wants that Pat's twins grow up American and inherit their share."

"And the French grandparents want the latter, of course, but not the former."

"That's it. They agreed to send 'em over, though, and dad's getting tired of waiting. He's not so well, and mama won't leave him. Twice he sent good sized checks, and they cashed 'em and kept stalling along about forwarding the twins on one count or another. So now I'm over here for a showdown.

"My job's all the tougher because I can't speak French. I've got to get me the right sort of interpreter.

"Yesterday I dropped into your office to change some money. You were pattering away in French to a young couple. That's why I was nervy enough to start talking to you back there in the zoo——"

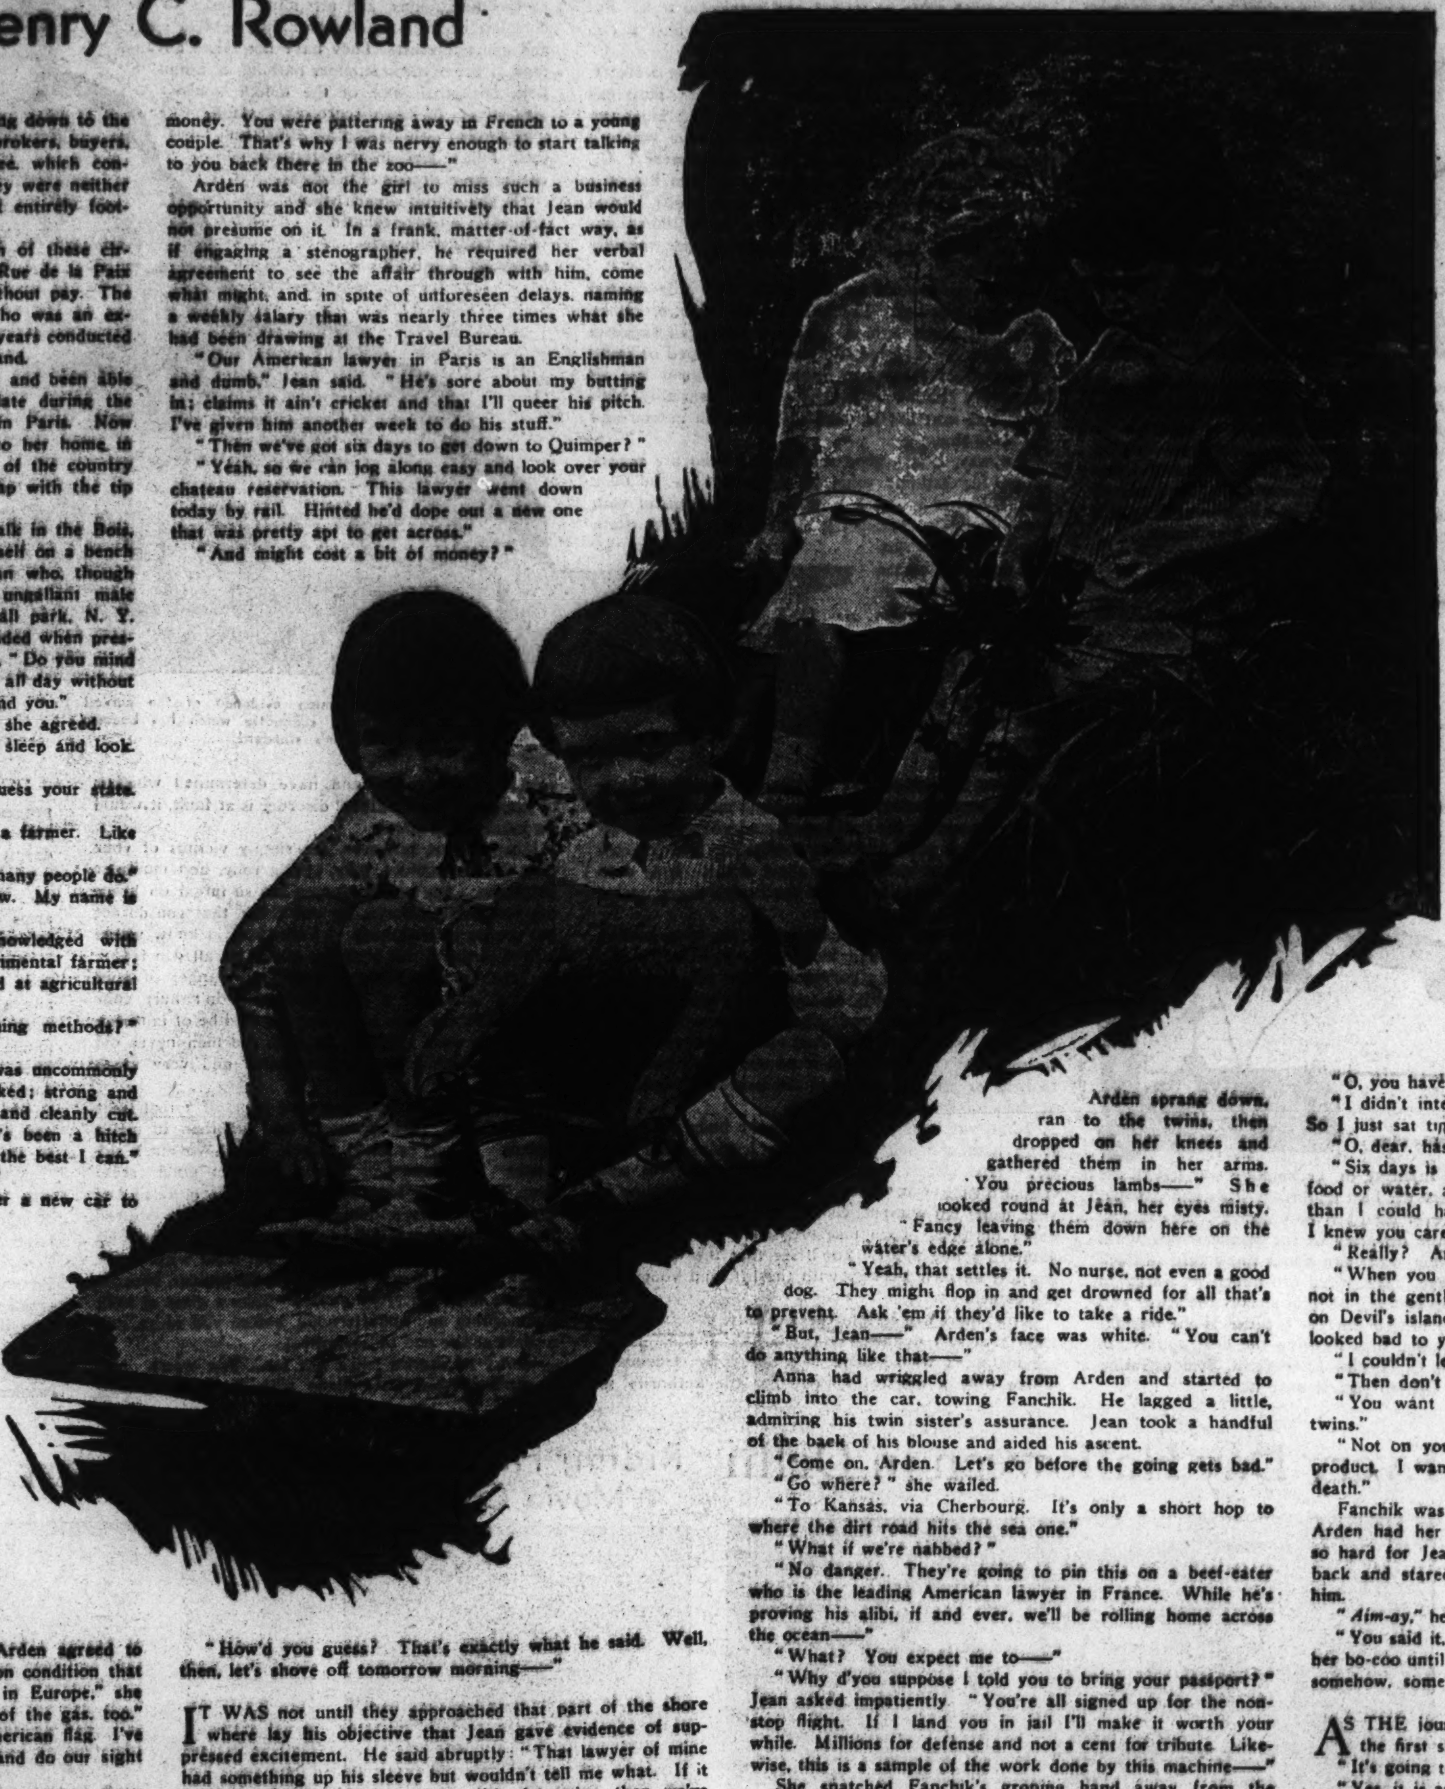
Arden was not the girl to miss such a business opportunity and she knew intuitively that Jean would not presume on it. In a frank, matter-of-fact way, as if engaging a stenographer, he required her verbal agreement to see the affair through with him, come what might, and, in spite of unforeseen delays, naming a weekly salary that was nearly three times what she had been drawing at the Travel Bureau.

"Our American lawyer in Paris is an Englishman and dumb," Jean said. "He's sore about my butting in; claims it ain't cricket and that I'll queer his pitch. I've given him another week to do his stuff."

"Then we've got six days to get down to Quimper?"

"Yeah, so we can jog along easy and look over your chateau reservation. This lawyer went down today by rail. Hinted he'd dope out a new one that was pretty apt to get across."

"And might cost a bit of money?"



"How'd you guess? That's exactly what he said. Well, then, let's shove off tomorrow morning——"

IT WAS not until they approached that part of the shore where lay his objective that Jean gave evidence of suppressed excitement. He said abruptly: "That lawyer of mine had something up his sleeve but wouldn't tell me what. If it worked, and he has got away with the twins, then we've just had a pleasant joy ride."

"We are there——" Arden had caught sight of a stone building grayish-green, then a pointed tower with an oriel window through the trees, inside a crumbling old wall to the right of the narrow sunken road that sloped down as if through an arboreal tunnel that made a vista with a bright blue splash at its end. "There are the chateau grounds."

"Well, then," Jean said grimly, "stand by to do your stuff. Say first that I'm Pat's brother and that I've come down here to see his kids. They can't refuse me that."

They came at this moment to a big gateway that was open because one of the massive stone pillars had toppled over. The portal on that side, sheet iron below and grilled above, had been unhinged and dragged to one side.

"Looks like poverty," Jean said, and turned in.

"Listen——" Arden gasped. "Stop the engine——"

Jean did so. He had caught the same sound. It was a shrill patter of children's voices. Aside from this a hush lay on the place. The big trees grew to the edge of the beach, but the colorful sunlight was beating in on it and they could see a short reach of the narrow, winding estuary.

As they listened, two little children appeared from around the corner of the boathouse. They were hand in hand, bare armed and with chubby pink legs and sandals, bloused in pink and baby blue, and the sun glistened on their thick yellow curls. They must have heard the sound of the engine before Jean switched off the current, as they stopped and stared at the car with eyes that had the bright, intense blue of the water.

Arden gasped: "What darlings!"

"Looks like my lawyer missed his best bet," Jean muttered.

The children, obviously twins and about three years of age, continued to stare, still holding hands. One of them, the girl, perhaps, put the thumb of her other hand in her pink mouth. The boy raised a plump arm and pointed.

"R'garde—la belle v'ture——"

Jean looked all about, then opened his door and stepped down. "Come on," he said briefly, "here's where we turn outlaw."

"But—Jean——" Arden pretended, aghast.

"They're Pat's kids, all right. That boy is the image of him, even now. And the girl favors my sister Anne——"

The baby heard him. She dimpled into a smile and touched her plump little breast. "Moi, An-na——" she lisped.

"Moi, Fanchik——" gurgled the boy.

Arden sprang down, ran to the twins, then dropped on her knees and gathered them in her arms. "You precious lambs——" She looked round at Jean, her eyes misty. "Fancy leaving them down here on the water's edge alone."

"Yeah, that settles it. No nurse, not even a good dog. They might flop in and get drowned for all that's to prevent. Ask 'em if they'd like to take a ride."

"But, Jean——" Arden's face was white. "You can't do anything like that——"

Anna had wriggled away from Arden and started to climb into the car, towing Fanchik. He lagged a little, admiring his twin sister's assurance. Jean took a handful of the back of his blouse and aided his ascent.

"Come on, Arden. Let's go before the going gets bad."

"Go where?" she wailed.

"To Kansas, via Cherbourg. It's only a short hop to where the dirt road hits the sea one."

"What if we're nabbed?"

"No danger. They're going to pin this on a beef-eater who is the leading American lawyer in France. While he's proving his alibi, if and ever, we'll be rolling home across the ocean——"

"What? You expect me to——"

"Why d'you suppose I told you to bring your passport?" Jean asked impatiently. "You're all signed up for the non-stop flight. If I land you in jail I'll make it worth your while. Millions for defense and not a cent for tribute. Likewise, this is a sample of the work done by this machine——"

She snatched Fanchik's groping hand away from the siren push, then scrambled up and gathered the twins onto her lap. "Now is the time for all good women to come to the aid of the party," Arden said. "Step on it with both feet, Jean. The tropics are nice, but they say the crowd is mixed at Devil's island. That's where the French send kidnapers." She turned her head. "Listen——"

From somewhere in the park of venerable trees a woman's voice called with a throaty lilt: "Fan-chik (rising on the 'chik'). Annik. Venez donc, p'tits——"

Annik wriggled around in Arden's lap, looked up at her face, and giggled. "V'la la bonne——"

"Sauvons nous——" whispered her brother.

"Jean, these kids have run away."

"Yeah? Well, if that's their racket, Uncle Jean will show them how it's done."

HE GAVE a brilliant demonstration that brought howls of delight from his appreciative niece and nephew. Arden had her arms full and loved it. Her maternal instinct was even stronger than Jean's avuncular, and more disinterested. The twins, climbing about on her with their steady syncopated patter and clean fresh baby smell, struck deep sympathetic chords in her.

"Where are you making for?" she asked Jean.

"Cherbourg. We can make it before dark. Catch the next ship."

"Yes. The next for Cayenne. Even if we all got aboard and headed for Sandy Hook you could no more get your twins past the immigration officer than you could carry two quarts of cognac past the customs one."

"I've got to study on that——"

"You could never pass. Our first hop is to get out of France. Drive to Havre and we can take the night boat for Southampton. We are apt to be escorted aboard by the maire of Havre and met by a band and the mayor of Southampton."

"And the police?"

"Gosh, no! Not with a Kansas tag and your American and my French. We are this moment the most precious things in Europe, for the lack of which I lost my job—rich American tourists. A young couple who love their Europe and love their twins. Can't be separated from either." Arden was getting reckless.

"Of course," Jean agreed. "I thought about all that. They'd give us another brace of kids if they thought we were in a hurry for a family. But they couldn't match these. The mold is broken. But it's funny how blood tells. There's something about these kids of brother Pat's that gets under my ribs."

IT PROVED much as Arden had foreseen about the Havre-Southampton night boat. They were made a present of it, passports politely waived. Here were Americans with the right spirit and to be encouraged. They were more than mere tourists; honored, paying guests.

"London next," Jean said, as Arden bathed the twins preparatory to dressing them in nice new clothes.

"Why London?"

"Well, I've been figuring this thing out. You're a travel expert and ought to know about getting the kids into the U. S. A. There's only one way to make it safe."

"That's one more than I can think up, offhand——"

"This is good. All we need to do is to get married."

She dropped the soap, and Fanchik dived for it. "O—so that's all."

"Yes, and not so hard. I got the dope this morning at the town hall. We can get a special license at Somerset house in London. It takes a little time, but now we got the twins there's no tearing hurry."

Arden began to laugh. Fanchik saved threatened hysterics by splashing water in her face. Jean went on. "Then you can get a new passport under your married name and have the twins entered on the dotted line for minor children. That fixes them."

"And me," Arden reminded him. "And yourself—until Reno us do part. Is that what's in your mind?"

"Not by a—look here, Arden, you know how things have been from the start. I couldn't mix 'em by making love to you, much as I've wanted to."

"O, you have, have you? I hadn't noticed it."

"I didn't intend you should. It wouldn't have been fair. So I just sat tight there beside you, day after day."

"O, dear, has it seemed as long as that?"

"Six days is a long time for a healthy man to go without food or water, and I've been hungrier and thirstier for you than I could have been for those things, especially after I knew you cared quite a lot for me."

"Really? And when was that?"

"When you backed my play to swipe the twins. It was not in the gentleman's agreement for you to take a chance on Devil's island. Not that I had any fear of that. But it looked bad to you."

"I couldn't let you down, Jean."

"Then don't let me down now."

"You want to marry me so that you can bootleg the twins."

"Not on your life! The twins are no more than a by-product. I want to marry you because I love you nearly to death."

Fanchik was slippery as an eel with soap and as wriggly. Arden had her hands full to hold him, which made it not so hard for Jean to hold Arden. Fanchik let his head flop back and stared up at the two faces in contact just above him.

"Aim-ay," he observed. "Aim-ay, beaucoup."

"You said it, kewpie," Jean told him, "and I aim to aim-ay her bo-coo until the last harvest is in the barn, and then some, somehow, somewhere——"

AS THE journey from London to Kansas neared its end the first shadow of gloom made itself apparent.

"It's going to slay me to give them up, Jean," Arden said.

"Yes, it is apt to be sort of tough until——"

She interrupted, flushing. "It will just about break my heart to leave these darlings even with their grandparents. And you seem to be pretty fond of them, too."

He nodded. "They sure got me hog-tied. Blood's thicker'n water. Fanchik looks more like Pat every day—and it's curious, Arden, but Annik looks like you. She's got your curly red gold hair and hot, blue eyes and turned up nose, and everything. But I guess the old folks will lend 'em to us for a spell now and then."

Jean swung the car through the entrance gates of the farm onto a smooth, tree-bordered, semi-lunar drive. Arden saw three people on the porch and one of them, a tall, broad-shouldered man with thick snowy hair and white mustache and imperial, rose and started in their direction.

"Dad——" Jean said breathlessly, "and there's mama in the rocker. Say—are my eyes——" he slowed.

"Are your eyes—what——"

"That bird beside her is the image of my Paris lawyer——"

"Look out—Jean——"

He had anticipated the warning and braked. From a thick clump of shrubbery a hot, fuzzy puppy had galloped out on to the drive directly ahead. In hot pursuit emerged two little children of about four years of age who, for all their haste, held hands tightly clasped.

At the squeal of brakes the puppy shied back toward them and was grabbed by the leader of the pair, who was identical with the other.

"Veux-tu, may-chant——" reproved the baby.

"Augh-h-h——" seconded the other in throaty reproach. "Faut le tap-ay, Maurice——"

Jean swallowed hard. "Maurice—that's dad's name," he said in a sunk voice.

"What—darlings——" Arden gasped faintly. She leaned out and asked the little girl twin who was staring at her, thumb in mouth: "Comment tu-t'appelle, cherie——?"

Round her thumb the baby answered shyly: "Anne-ik Ma' Ma'on, madame."

Said Jean's dumb English lawyer a little later: "——all my fault, and I'm no end cut up about it. Wasn't cricket for me to keep you in the dark. But I'd no idea you really meant to have a try at kidnaping. Jolly sporting of you, I must say——"

Arden interrupted: "Where did you find these—our twins?"

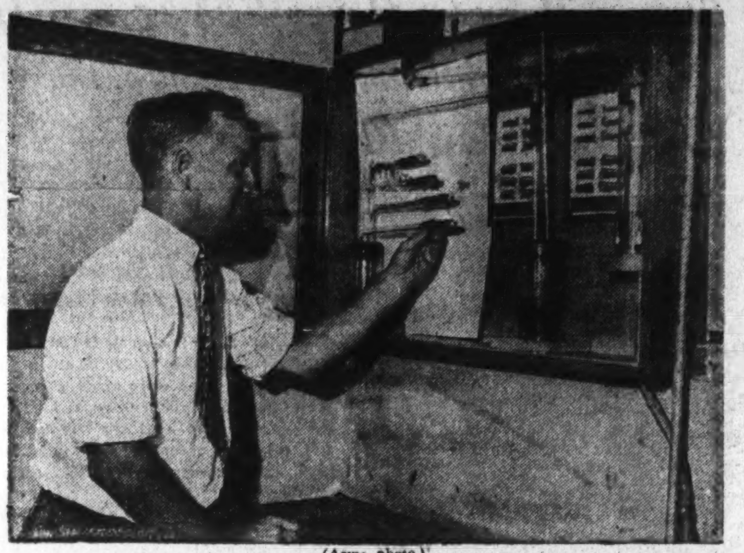
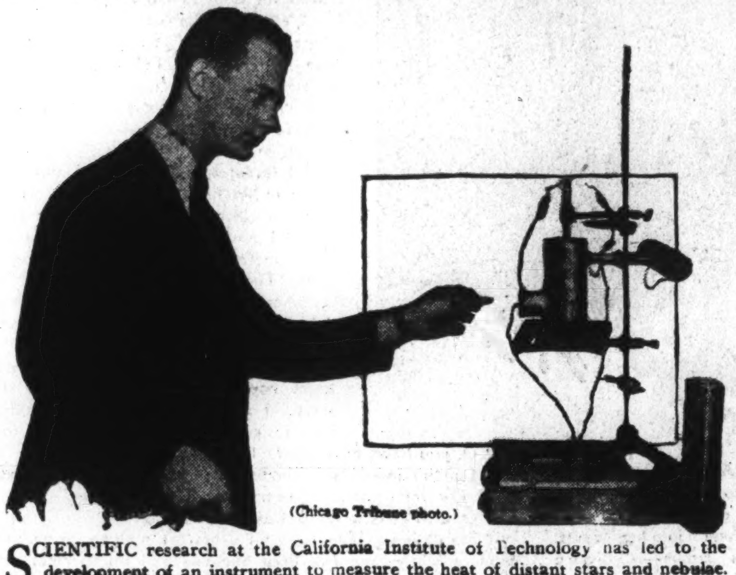
A Mechanical Cigar Smoker



(Acme photo.)

A MACHINE which actually smokes cigars and thereby determines their quality is used for making tests in the laboratories of the United States department of agriculture. Every cigar is a blend of several different kinds of tobacco. In many cases the filler will come from one part of the world, the binder from another, and the wrapper from still another. By experimenting with different combinations of filler, binder, and wrapper the best type of cigar may be evolved. Much may be learned about the quality of a cigar by observing the way in which it burns. This photograph shows the mechanical smoker in action, puffing at four cigars.

To Measure the. Heat of the Stars



(Chicago Tribune photo.)

SCIENTIFIC research at the California Institute of Technology has led to the development of an instrument to measure the heat of distant stars and nebulae. It is said to be the most sensitive apparatus ever used for the purpose. The extreme sensitiveness comes from the smallness of the diameter of the bismuth-alloy wires that form the core of the instrument. These wires are about one-tenth as thick as a human hair and are invisible to the eye. The wires are joined by solder to a small receiver of gold leaf. When the weakest ray of light strikes the wires and the receiver the heat generated sets up an electrical current because of the dissimilarity of the metals. The current is measurable, thus showing the heat applied, to one-millionth of a degree. Pictured here is C. Hawley Cartwright, demonstrating the instrument's sensitiveness by holding a lighted cigaret near it.

How to Acquire the Curved Silhouette

Posture, Diet, and Exercises Are Correctives for the Flat Chested

By Antoinette Donnelly

HOW different the trend of silhouette inquiries from that of a few years ago! For a time it was only an occasional girl or woman who wrote for information on bust development. That was when busts were being strapped down, pressed flat behind tight brassieres and corselette tops. But now the question of how to develop the bust is one of my most common ones.

This is the sort of thing I hear: "I am 5 feet 6, 23, and my bust measurement is only 31. How can I make it 34?" Or, "I am 30, 5 feet 7. How can I recover the bust fullness I used to have before I flattened my figure down with tight brassieres?" Or, "I am 18, and have no bustline at all. Am flat as a pancake. Can you send me a diet to develop?" And so on. Every mail brings several or more indications of the current popularity of a curved and womanly bustline.

There is a point in connection with this desired curved line of bust. The indented waistline, no doubt, is just as much wanted. Perhaps one need suggests the other. And remedying one underveloped or overdeveloped of these two anatomical features has an improving effect on the other. And, invariably, both waist and bust are in need of correction at one and the same time.

Anyway, it is a good sign that women are recognizing the esthetic value of a curved line of bust. First, because a figure is much more beautiful with one. Secondly, because it insures a healthier state of being. It's the natural line for a woman to possess. And certainly with our womanly clothes of the moment, the only style of silhouette to wear inside of them.

Lillian Bond offers charming evidence of the curved, though not too fulsome, silhouette which has become fashion's standard.

At the risk becoming too repetitious on this one theme, I must drag in posture again as the first and most imperative step in correcting the flatchested, underdeveloped bust line. Also, I must advocate something that I know women are not enthusiastic about doing. It is deep breathing movements to give the body's upper sector a chance to develop.

As I have said many times before, the mere motion of raising the chest and keeping it raised while you sit, stand, walk adds a curved line that was not there before. With some girls, an increase in bust measurement of a full inch, sometimes more, is accomplished with this simple chest lift. And until you have learned to hold that chest up there is no use expecting a diet to help, or massage, or even the exercise forms prescribed for bust development.

First, you simply have to hold the body up. Hold it up high and self-respectingly. I wish you'd take out a tape measure, you girls who want curves, and measure both waist and bustline. First, measure in your usual flat-chested, waist-spreading, round-shouldered position. Then measure when the figure has assumed a fine uplift. You'll see that the waist, too, has lost an inch anyway with the lift, and your bust has gained.

Now, there are certain cases of bust underdevelopment that call definitely for medical advice These are instances where there is a glandular deficiency, where only a medical adviser has the authority to direct. But more often, with the younger women particularly, the lack of development is due to undernourishment over a period of years. They have had neither the proper food to support them healthfully during the growing years nor have they had the proper muscular direction. These girls have spent their time reading, at movies afternoons, and attending dances to the complete exclusion of body building outdoor sport and game interest. They have not taken advantage of the outdoor summer bathing, of tennis, golf, basketball, nor of the indoor pools. And many of them regrettably smoke incessantly with damaging effect on their lungs, and, in consequence, on the development of the chest.

If you young women who are much underdeveloped would only treat yourselves to a good physical examination and have determined whether or not some constitutional disorder is at fault, it would be money well spent.

Most of you, however, are simply victims of your own follies—posture folly, eating folly, and muscular indolence. You young women are so intent on keeping your weight down, for one thing, that you do not get proper nourishment. I know you. I know you're scared to death the boys are going to call you fat.

Truth is that there is very little danger of your getting fat. But a little flesh wouldn't hurt your status with the boys a bit, and it would be of immense benefit to your vitality. In fact, the men never did like that skinny figure, flatchested and very much like their own.

So I'd suggest that you give yourself a real treat at breakfast. Eat oatmeal and smother it under cream. If you can add a little butter, so much the better. For luncheon take a bowl of good cream soup, mushroom, tomato, or celery. Eat a salad and then a chocolate pudding or cup custard or stewed fruit with cream. For dinner take two vegetables and add all the butter you can. Eat meat with butter added to it. Butter is a wonderful fat builder, because it is the most digestible of fats. Take a glass of milk midmorning and midafternoon, before you retire, and a glass at the end of each meal.

Don't be scared you'll get fat. You won't. Not if you'll exercise daily along with the food building program. Get outdoors and walk three, four, or five miles—BUT holding that chest up and breathing deeply. Carry yourself tall. Think of yourself that way. Tall and chesty. Join a dancing class if you can. If you can't, turn on the radio and with your arms up and chest up dance all over the place for ten minutes daily.

And do this exercise every morning before an open window: Stand with the chest up, abdomen in, and shoulders back. Take a deep breath. Then relax a second. Raise the arms up slowly, as you inhale. Raise them to the full extended position. Then swing the arms in circles, beginning with tiny ones, then larger and wider sweeps. Drop the arms and relax. Then repeat. You'll find that this single exercise will do a lot for the wanted bust development, for the arms, shoulder line, and also for the waistline.

You underdeveloped girls can do just as much for your silhouette as any determined-to-reduce girl can do for hers, if you use the same intelligence about food values she does and apply the same persistence. You've got to rest much more than the plump sister. Put yourself on a ten hour schedule. You need that much to get the nerves quieted, for you usually are a high-strung body or an anemic, listless one. The point is that other girls have made their figures over beautifully. If you don't, it is your own indifferent, indolent fault.

Blood Is Thicker

"Right in Quimper, at the creche—after hunting all over the shop—to match 'em as closely as possible."

"What are their parents?"

The lawyer looked embarrassed. "Ooh—ah, their father was a sardine fisherman who got drowned. Their mother was a farm girl who most unfort'nately got struck by a car and killed."

Arden asked incredulously: "And the Count and Countess de Gullenec were willing to make the exchange?"

"That took a bit of doing. But I managed to convince them that it wasn't quite fair to the children of Patrick MacMahon to deprive them of the million dollars apiece their American grandfather meant to settle on them, provided he had their custody until they came of age When that idea soaked in a bit, I pointed out that they'd got used to the children about and those other jolly little tots would soon learn to love them, and all this and that. Poor little beggars were orphans and it would be a praiseworthy Christian act to give 'em a show in life—and that and the other, y'understand."

Later, when they were alone together, Jean said sheepishly to Arden: "Well, we've got to hand it to this Britisher that he isn't quite so dumb as he looks and talks. Now, we got a fresh job for him soon's he gets back."

"To square us with the authorities?"

"O, scrap all that. Drop it into the oubliette of one of those old chateaux we saw. He has got to get busy and rustle out a fresh pair of twins—for the Count and Countess of Gilly-neck."

She flung her arms round his neck. "Jean—you mean we're to keep them?"

"Why, of course. They're papered on your passport as our minor children. We don't want to get in wrong with the state department. I've fixed it up with the old folks—all four of 'em——"

"Darling—and besides, Fanchik's the image of Pat and Annik looks like me—and, after all, blood is thicker—ouch."

Every Day Halloween in Delhi

ALTHOUGH the movement for the emancipation of women has spread through the orient like wildfire within the last decade, there still are sections of India in which the Moslem women of high rank dwell behind the barrier of the purdoh, appearing in public only when completely shrouded from head to foot in a covering that permits them to peer out through two eye holes but prevents any view of their features by others. In modern Turkey women as a class have discarded the veil, and in Persia, through the influence of the former Queen Souriya, many have adopted western garb; but the wives of the Mohammedans of high estate in India still are backward about accepting European ideas. Pictured here are two Moslem women of Delhi, in their cloaklike veils, and a little girl who is yet too young to hide behind a mask.

Riding High on a Movie Crane

(Acme photo.)

THE changing style of movie equipment is illustrated in this new camera boom crane, which was used for the first time in the filming of "The Man I Killed." Phillips Holmes, who plays a leading role in the production, is shown here taking a ride into the treetops aboard the boom. With him is his pet German schnauzer, a gift from Groucho Marx. The schnauzer regarded the entire proceedings with high disapproval. As he is not a bird dog, he believes his place is on the ground, his master explained after they had descended from their precarious perch.

In the Heart of a Chinese City

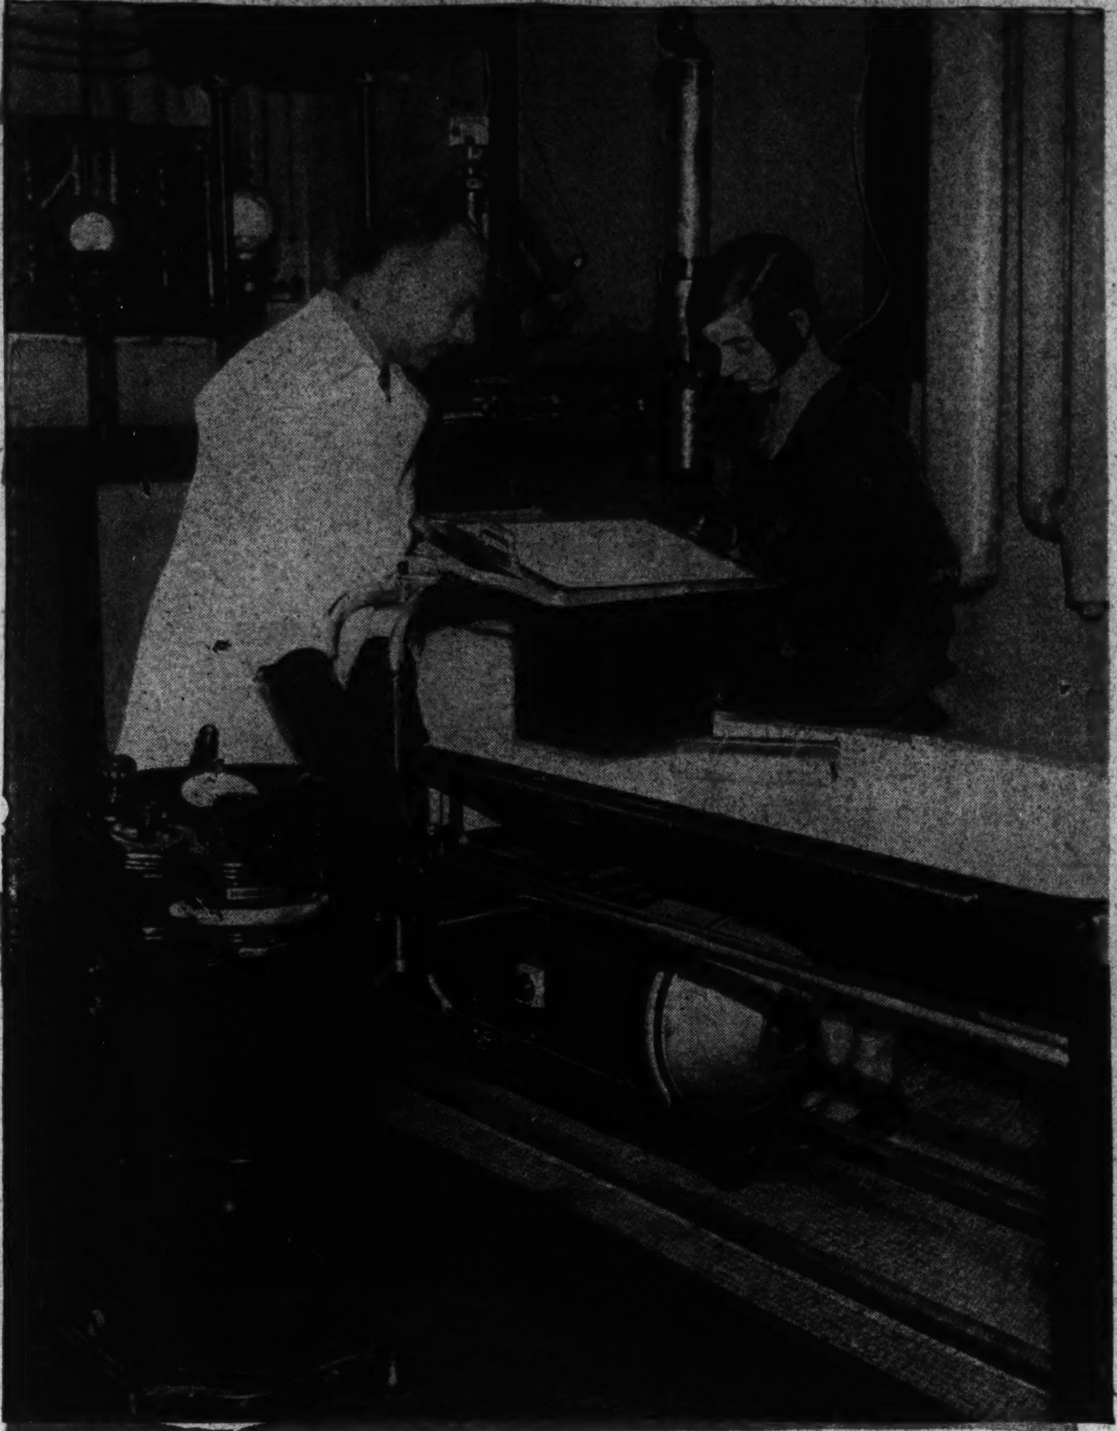
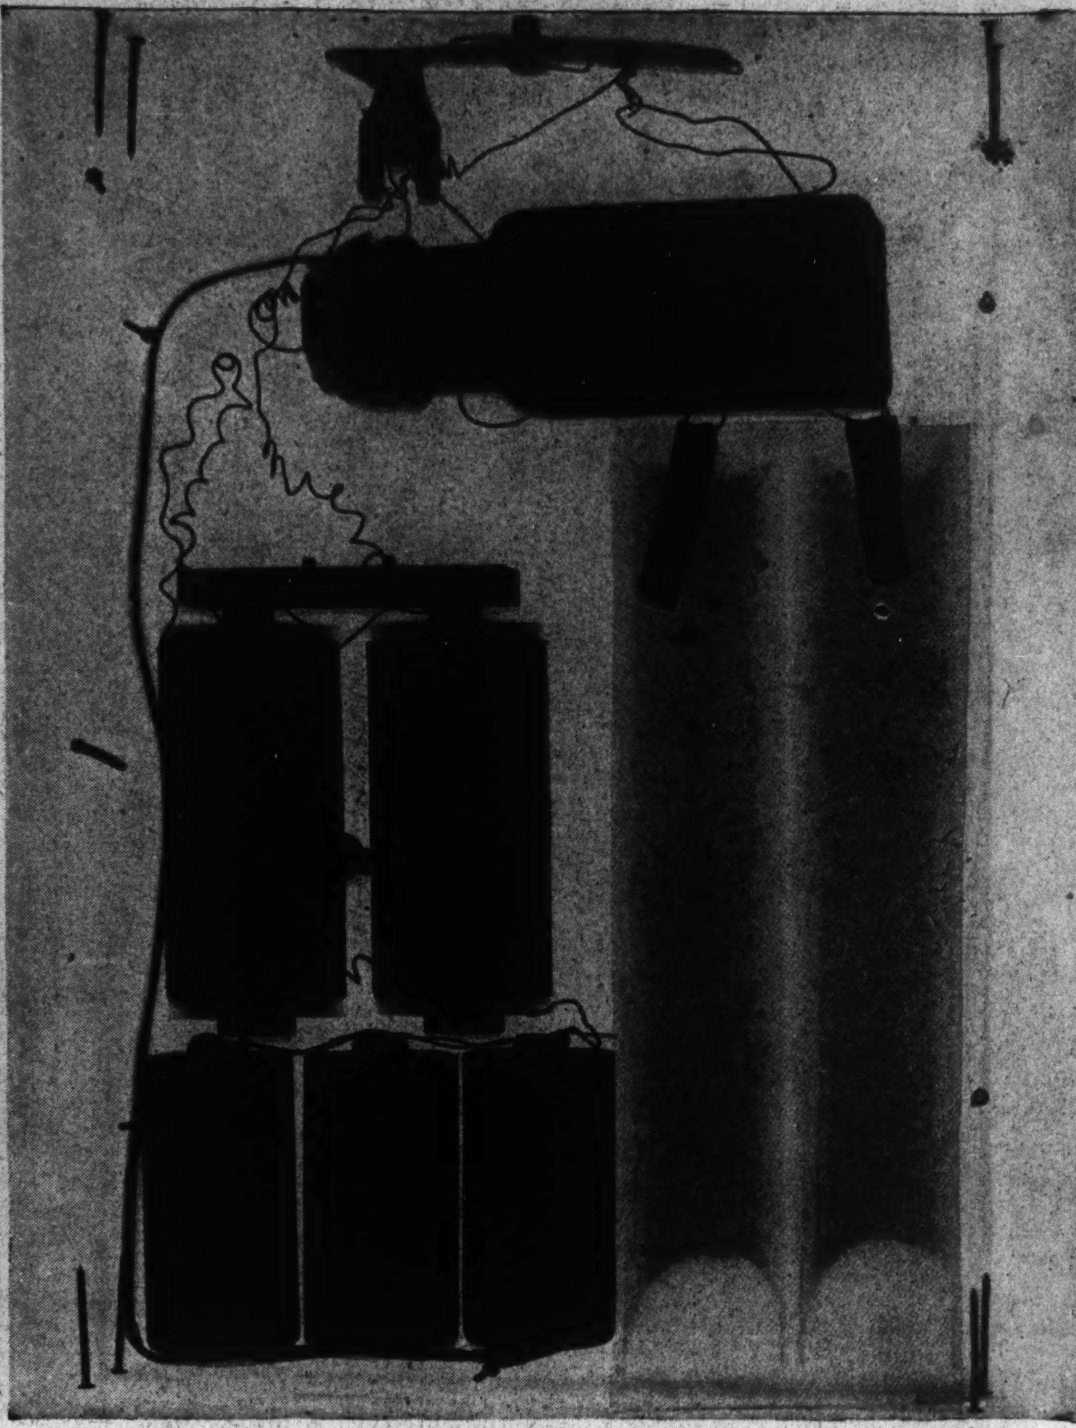
PICTURED here is a street scene in Canton, China, one of the oldest cities of that very old land. The buildings resemble very much those seen in any American city, and it is difficult to realize that the photograph was taken in the center of an ancient city, teeming with two million people, all of whom, with the exception of a few hundred foreigners, are Chinese living under laws and customs quite the same as those under which their ancestors lived centuries ago. The tall building pictured in the middle distance is a department store. In the center foreground is a rickshaw stand, with three of the two-wheeled vehicles waiting for fares. Canton is in the province of Kwang-tung, on the north bank of the Pearl river. It is in daily communication with Hongkong by river boats.

Detecting Death in Innocent Looking Packages



Dr. George Levene and his assistant demonstrating how the contents of a box can be examined under a fluoroscope. It is in this manner that Dr. Levene proposes that postal authorities detect bombs in the mail. (Acme photos.)



A bomb photographed by the aid of Dr. Levene's fluoroscope. The two long tubes at the right represent dynamite sticks. Batteries and wiring are revealed in the picture which was made at a demonstration of the bomb detecting device.

THE American public not along ago was shocked by a wave of terrorism created by the makers and senders of destructive internal machines. Bombs were delivered through the mails to widely separated destinations. tragic explosions followed the opening of the innocent looking packages and postal authorities were thrown into a panic by the use of their service as the instrument of death.

A Boston physician, Dr. George Levene, in charge of the X-ray research department of the Massachusetts memorial hospital, located at the Evans Memorial hospital in Boston, has perfected a device which he says will frustrate the sending of bombs through the mails. He has submitted his invention to the postal authorities in the hope that they will adopt it for use in the big postoffices and railway mail headquarters of the country.

By means of a fluoroscope Dr. Levene found it possible to detect and photograph the contents of a sealed package with an X-ray camera. An innocent appearing package, which did not tick or rattle, was placed over the piercing eye of the fluoroscope and in the lighted square concentrating on the box postal officials saw three batteries, side by side, a transformer, wires leading to a cap attached to a stick of dynamite and a cunningly devised spring lock which would complete the electric circuit the moment the lid of the package was raised.

The fluoroscope even penetrated a lead box. Photographs of the contents of the box were hung up against a frosted light slide to show every detail of wrapping and even the grain of the wood of an outer box.

Dr. Levene pointed out how simple it would be to diagnose the contents of the box, cut through a section and sever the wires and render the machine harmless. The inventor's fluoroscope, it is said, could be used in perfect safety by a man seated within a lead booth, observing by a series of mirrors the contents of packages passing slowly before him upon an endless belt.

Their First Bath in 600 Years

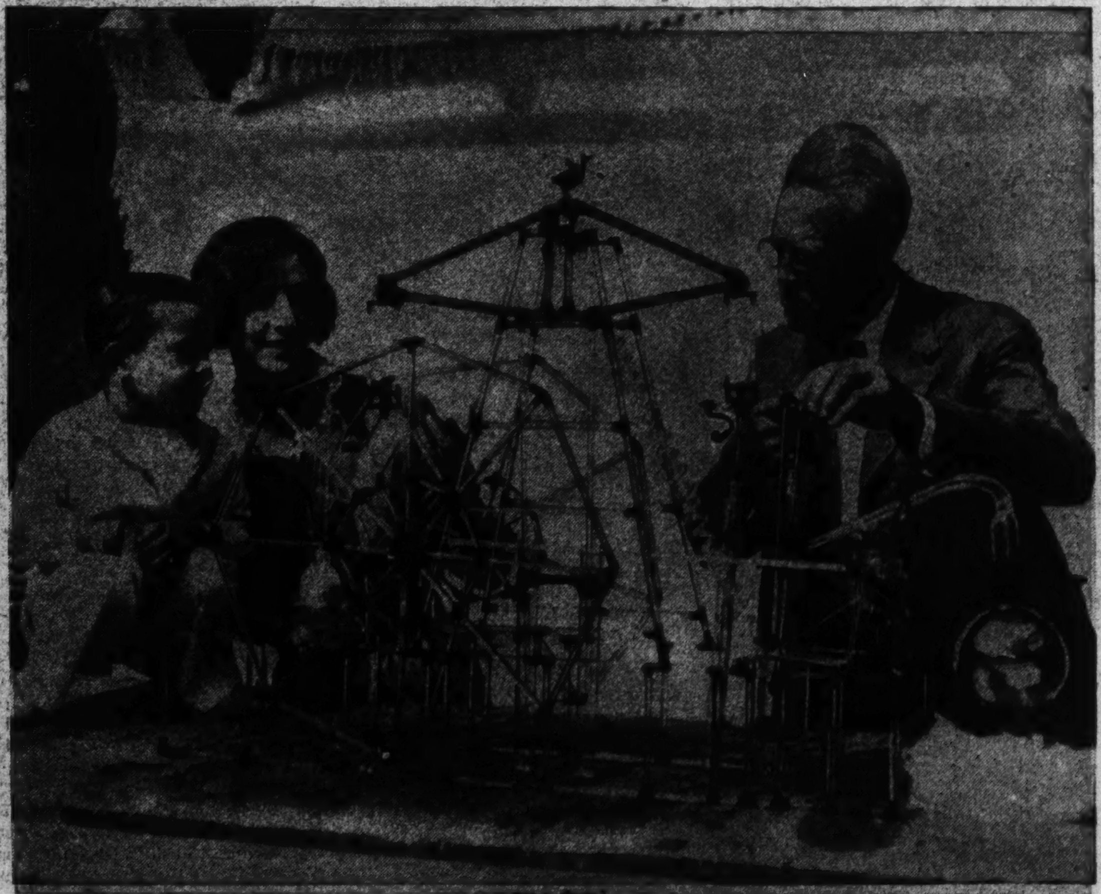
THE panes of stained glass which the workman is supporting are among the oldest in England. At the time this photograph was taken, they had been removed from the windows of the Merton college chapel, Oxford, for cleaning. These panes were installed more than 600 years ago, shortly after stained glass first was adopted by the builders of the great Gothic cathedrals. It is believed that the panes were not disturbed from that time until they were taken out for cleaning recently.

A Steam Engine Entirely of Glass



THIS novel toy, which looks like a whole amusement park was designed and built recently by a glassblower as a birthday present to his three-year-old grandson. It is a steam engine made entirely of glass. The boy's second birthday had scarcely passed when the designer, A. W. Scott of Long Beach, Cal., began working on the mechanism. In eleven months the toy was completed. It is made up of 374 different pieces, is three feet long and 22 inches high. It has a governor and two flywheels. An alcohol lamp heats the water which is converted into steam to run the engine. The mechanism develops about 1/20 of a horsepower. In the accompanying illustration the inventor is shown making final adjustments on the complicated apparatus preparatory to demonstrating it to his little grandson and to the boy's mother.

LINED with solid beaten gold, the cup pictured here, which symbolizes Neptune the god of the sea, is the work of an 80-year-old Philadelphian, Franz Xavier Zirnkilton. The cup takes the form of a snail shell. The lid shows Neptune and his dolphins, with a mermaid swimming near, offering Neptune a pearl. All of the carvings are of gold. Zirnkilton has been likened to the great Benvenuto Cellini, the famous Italian worker in metals of the sixteenth century. Zirnkilton works in gold and platinum.

The Lesson of the Titanic

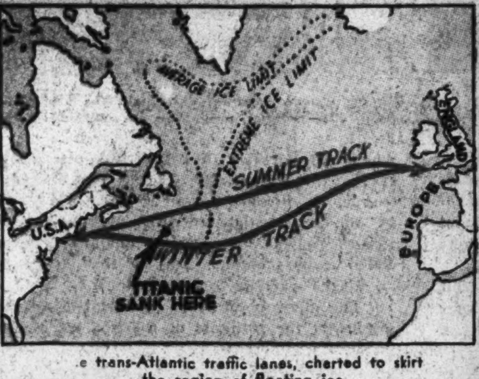
By Howard Barry

THE crew of a United States cutter engaged in iceberg patrol duty far out upon the restless waters of the North Atlantic will pause for a few moments next Thursday, April 14, to hold a memorial service for those who went down with the Titanic to the bottom of the sea.

On that date twenty years ago the world's largest liner was plowing westward on its maiden voyage. This vessel, the Titanic, was the crowning achievement of the shipbuilder's skill, embodying features which had been developed after centuries of experimentation. It was like a great floating hotel, embellished with all the luxuries and refinements to be found in the most lavish structure built on shore.

At last, it seemed, man could go to sea and still be sheltered from the fury of nature. The waves and the winds apparently had been conquered by engineering skill.

But even while the gay and cosmopolitan crowd was dancing and dining in the brilliant salons, icebergs were sliding into the sea from the eternal glaciers of Greenland and drifting southward toward the shipping lanes. One of these submerged so that it was all but invisible, floated directly into the path of the gigantic liner. There was a tremendous impact. The ship shivered, listed, and began to settle. A few hours later it went down with 1,500 people on board.



.e trans-Atlantic traffic lanes, charted to skirt the region of floating ice.

The Titanic as it appeared just before starting on its first and last voyage in April, 1912. At the time it was the largest liner afloat.

This catastrophe shocked the world into a temporary belief that the sea would never be safe. It served to spur engineers to greater efforts, however, so that now they build ships which, for all practical purposes, are unsinkable.

There is, for example, the case of the Liberty Glo, built several years after the Titanic disaster. In the course of a winter gale off the coast of Holland this ship struck a floating mine which had been set out during the war. The mine exploded and tore the boat open from keel to deck just forward of the bridge. The fury of the gale soon wrenched the ship into two pieces, the forward section being blown one way and the after section another. Next day both sections of the Liberty Glo still were afloat and were salvaged by a passing ship, which rescued captain and crew. Eventually they were joined together again and the ship was put back into service.

A ship engaged in iceberg patrol duty drawn up beside its quarry and photographed through an opening in the ice. It charts the location and calculates the drift of the iceberg and then broadcasts the information by radio.

There is another striking example to illustrate the progress which has been made toward safety at sea. A ship called the Malolo was proceeding through a dense fog off Nantucket light when it was rammed by a Norwegian freighter. The port side was smashed open at the bulkhead separating the two boiler rooms, which immediately were flooded. But watertight doors controlled by a valve upon the bridge were promptly closed, isolating the boiler rooms from the rest of the ship. In five minutes 8,000 tons of water had entered the hull of the Malolo.

The ship settled about sixteen feet and listed about three degrees, but it never was in the slightest danger of sinking. It was towed back to the yards and repaired.

Thus the Malolo gave a practical demonstration of the ability of the modern ship to stay afloat when badly battered. This boat is divided into sections separated by watertight bulkheads and is so designed that five amidship compartments, comprising 40 per cent of its length, could all be flooded—and still the craft would float. The Malolo has a double bottom, one five feet above the other, and the intervening space is divided into six foot cells. The boat could be ripped along the keel from bow to stern and the second bottom would keep it from sinking.

A lifeboat from the sunken Titanic, photographed as it approached the Carpathia, which picked up many of the survivors.

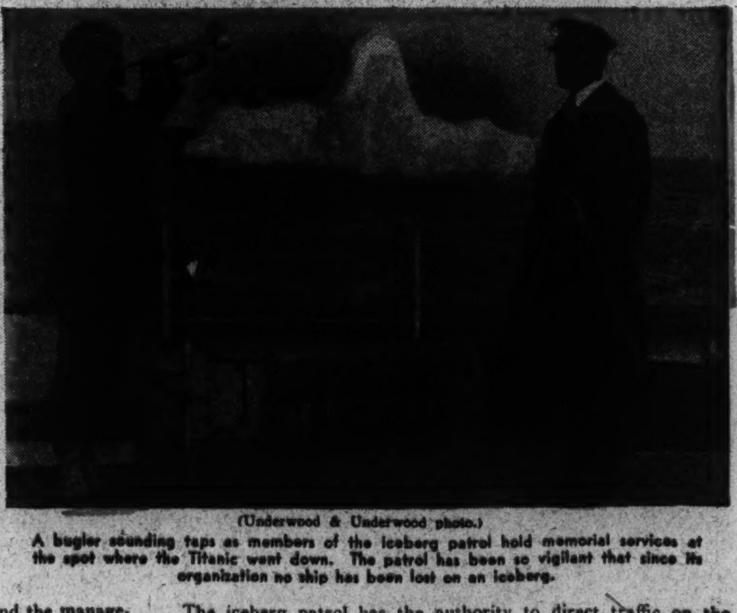
Ships still go down, it is true; but in nearly every case the disaster is due to preventable conditions, such as age or a bad state of repair.

Effective steps have been taken to prevent crashes as well as to keep ships afloat after accidents have occurred. Shortly after the sinking of the Titanic, an iceberg patrol was organized to protect trans-Atlantic traffic. The expense of the service is borne by the nations which benefit, and the management is left to the United States coast guard.

Two cutters have been put on permanent duty in the North Atlantic, and during the period of iceberg danger, from March 1 to July 1, one or the other of these boats is on guard. Its business is to locate every iceberg floating toward the shipping lanes, calculate its drift, and broadcast this information by radio. It is estimated that some days as many as 500 ships listen for these reports. Many of them send queries to the iceberg patrol, some typical questions being:

"Where is the southernmost ice?"

"I am in a heavy fog, latitude 47 degrees 6 minutes, longitude 49 degrees 25 minutes. What is the best course to clear the ice?"



(Underwood & Underwood photo.)

A bugler sounding taps as members of the iceberg patrol hold memorial services at the spot where the Titanic went down. The patrol has been so vigilant that since its organization no ship has been lost on an iceberg.

The iceberg patrol has the authority to direct traffic on the trans-Atlantic lanes. Navigators have agreed on definite paths for ships traveling between the United States and Europe, the eastbound and westbound lanes being separated by 60 miles of open water. A boat out of its traffic route is a menace similar to a motor car on the wrong side of the road.

At times, however, icebergs float close to the paths of shipping, and the patrol finds it expedient to broadcast instructions for boats on both paths to detour southward at a certain point so as to clear the drifting ice. Navigators are obliged to follow these directions to avoid the danger of collisions with other ships as well as with icebergs. The effectiveness of the patrol is attested by the fact that since its organization no ship has been lost on an iceberg.

Be THIN
It's Easy Now

● Millions of people, in late years, have found it easy to reduce. Modern science has discovered a great cause of excess fat. A certain gland becomes weak. Its secretion largely affects nutrition. Its absence means that too little food turns to energy, too much goes to fat. That is why fat people become lazy—all due to that weak gland.

Since this discovery, doctors the world over have been feeding that gland factor in obesity. A like gland taken from food animals.

The results are seen in every circle. Excess fat has been fast disappearing. Now all fashions, all ideas of youth and beauty, are based on slenderness.

Marmola prescription tablets embody this right method in right form. A famous medical laboratory prepares them for this purpose. People have used them for 24 years—millions of boxes of them. Users have told others the results, and Marmola has become a major factor in conditions which you see about you—slender figures, youth, beauty and vim.

Stop the hard and harmful methods until you see what Marmola does. Combat the cause, as all modern doctors do. As weight comes down, watch your vim come back. Don't wait longer while so many are enjoying these results. Start today, and stop when you are normal.

WE ARE PROUD OF OUR PRIZE-WINNING CONTESTANTS

Two Junior Post Essayists Win In the Big Post's Prize Contest

Dear Post Boys and Girls: Hurrah! Two Junior Post contributors won first prizes in The Post George Washington Essay Contest.

You have seen much of Mary Lusby's work in The Junior Post. Here is where she got her training which enabled her to be victorious among thousands of competitors. Mary has been a member of The Junior Post Writers Club for years.

When she read about The Post George Washington Essay Contest she decided to enter it. From her Junior Post training she knew that the theme must be an original one and that she could not afford to be careless. Congratulations, Mary. The Junior Post is proud of you.

The other Junior Post winner is Evelyn Troy Snyder, who first became interested in The Junior Post while living in the Panama Canal Zone. When the big Washington Post would come to her parents, Evelyn always asked for The Junior Post. By and by, she began to write for it and, oh, the joy when she first saw her stories in print.

Naturally, the Snyders kept on being readers of The Washington Post when they came to this city to live.

So today Evelyn feels amply rewarded for all her interest in The Junior Post for she feels it had much to do with winning a first prize in The Post George Washington Essay Contest.

The Junior Post is maintained by The Washington Post in order to give the boys and girls of the homes entered by The Washington Post a chance to learn how to write and draw and have the inspiration of seeing their work published in The Junior Post.

In the years The Junior Post has been in existence it has seen thousands of boys and girls qualify as contributors. Come on, boys and girls of today; help to make your Junior Post bigger and better than ever. You will never regret it.

Now that the Easter holidays are over do your best to earn higher marks for the rest of the year in your schools. Then you will enjoy the big vacation all the more.

Do not forget, please, to send in more stories, poems and drawings for The Junior Post. We need them very much and there is room for everything worth while in our dear little paper.

EDITOR JUNIOR POST.

Spring.

The sun with the rain, many new plants will bring,
In this glorious, wonderful, new-born spring.
The snow and the frost are quickly melting away
And there're noticeable violets which have come out today.
The roots are sprouting of many gay flowers.
And there are pretty, green leaves covering once bare bowers.
The birds with their vibrated voices sing,
Of the joyous wonders which are born with spring.
The lazy drone of the bees can be heard in the air,
And playing children are seen everywhere:
Their talking and laughter in the still air rings
In a beautiful, sunshiny day of spring.

My Sunday.

On Sunday I read the papers. Then I went to Sunday school.

I came home and mother said, you have to go to the bakery. When I came from the bakery I went to Clarendon to ride home with daddy, he was working over in Clarendon.

Then when I came back to my aunt's and came home and ate my dinner. Now I am writing for The Junior Post.

Easter.

All nature is at its best today,
The birds awoke with the first sun ray,
And the songster in his joy sang,
While from the church Easter tidings rang.

The flowers have blossomed all anew,
The buds were open in the morning dew,
While the sun came out and shown so bright,
All the world was bathed in the glorious sunlight.

For this very day is centuries old,
Was the rising of our Lord, as the prophets foretold;
The robin and the bluebird sing,
Softly in tune as the church bells ring.

From every branch and every bower,
Spring is here in leaf and flower,
And while these joys swell the world's pride,
Ring out the glad joy of Eastertide.

KARL H. STELLO.

The Rain.

The rain is coming down ever so fast,
As from school we hurry past.
You can hear it on the roof all through the night,
And everything is wet in the morning light.

Earning a Dollar.

The time was drawing near for our Sunday school to hold its annual picnic. We were going to Mountain Lake, a fine swimming resort, near Stuarts Draft. Of course, we all expected to go in swimming but at this time I was in great need of a new bathing suit as my old one was in rags and tatters. I had secured the money from mother to get myself a new one.

When I went to town I looked about for some time but was unable to find one which suited me. As I passed a store which I had overlooked before, a vivid red card caught my eye. I turned and walked to the window. There was the very suit I wanted. I walked into the store and asked the price of it.

When I was told that it was $5.00 I was very disappointed as I had only $4.00.

I said nothing about the suit when I went home.

I thought and thought of ways to earn that extra dollar for I was determined not to ask daddy or mother for it.

The next day was Sunday and I awoke that morning still thinking of how I would earn that extra dollar. Sunday evening after dinner I picked up The Washington Post, which was lying on the library table, to look at the "funnies." Having finished them I laid them aside and having nothing specially to do I turned to the editorial column of The Washington Post. I glanced over one page and turned it over. "The Junior Post!" This looked interesting to me and I read it through. When I had finished I was very excited. This little paper for girls and boys I found was published each week of stories, essays, poems, pictures and many other interesting things written by boys and girls all over the world, past the age of six years and under eighteen years. The best of each story, poem or picture each week received a one dollar prize. Naturally I thought this was my chance. I set to work at once with pen and paper and soon had drawn a cartoon and written a 300-word essay I mailed them the next day but was very doubtful of winning a prize On the next Sunday I saw I had won a dollar prize. I was very much excited and ran to tell mother about it. The next day I got the much desired bathing suit.

The Tiny Little Nest.

Did you ever stop to think
What a wonderful thing
Is the tiny little nest
Built by the creature on wing?

All day long he seems to work,
Going here and there for straw,
Bringing back bits of silk
And then again some more.

He works with all his might
With not a tool to help,
Nothing but his little beak
And his tiny little self.

Yet could you find a neater job
And on done half so well
As by this little fellow,
The bird that lives in the dell?

Man and all his latest aids
With twenty years to complete
Could never in this wide world
Make one half so neat.

The Pets' Corner

Edited by Ding-How of Hydegree

(Mascot of The Junior Post).

Bow, wow, wow, wow! The Junior Post is the best paper in the world and the Pets' Corner is the finest part of The Junior Post, though, of course, as the editor of the Pets' Corner I am only telling this to a few pets and our boys and girls.

Did you see all our Junior Post girls and boys who won out in the big Post George Washington Essay Contest last Sunday?

I looked through them all and never saw a mention of Mr. and Mrs. Setter Dog and their family, who used to live at Mount Vernon with George and Martha Washington and take long walks with George Washington. That is, Susan Setter Dog says they did, and she is going to write a story for the Pets' Corner about it.

Daisy and Spider wrote me one of the nicest letters I ever received. It came all the way from Aiken. They are having a good time down there. They are good reporters and will send me all the news to put in this corner. Bow, wow, wow! I thought I would send them one of my pictures for their art gallery. I do not want to brag, of course, but my pictures are very handsome and would be an ornament to any place. I left off my eyeglasses and put my typewriter away while I had it taken. But any one should recognize me as an editor just as soon as they looked at my picture.

Mr. Tweet Canary has been having such a wonderful time singing and singing all day all about the beautiful red and yellow roses on the window sill near his golden bungalow. Mr. Tweet says he has heard all he wants to hear about those airplanes and sings at them every time the mail pilot flies over the window near his home.

Mr. Tweet says he'd rather trust to his own wings when he gets ready to go to New York or Paris. Well, it is all right for him to talk that way because he comes of a flying family, just like Trixie Moffett. As for me, I think it is more dignified for an editor to ride in an automobile.

Mrs. Black Cat and Purr and Furr had a concert last night which began at dark and ended at dawn. Mr. Tweet says he does not like their singing at all and pulled all the curtains dwon in his golden bungalow so he would not hear them.

Johnny Bulldog has just gone by with his mouth full of a big meat bone. I think it would look better if he ate his lunch in the house. I always do, but, of course, even an editor can eat ice cream at the drug store.

I see by the papers there is a great deal of talk just now about the elephant and the donkey who are going to take part in some race in Chicago this summer. Mr. Tweet says he is going to give a farewell party for them in his golden bungalow before they leave. I think he had better send them flowers and something to eat on the way out there because I understand they are both rather heavy and Tweet's golden bungalow will not hold many pounds.

There is that Hop Toy on the telephone again with another story of a wedding. Who cares? We had ice cream for dinner today, too.

Dear Ding-How: I am a little goldfish and my name is Amos. I have a brother named Andy. I don't suppose you like goldfish, but I like you. My mistress lives in an apartment and can't have any other pets, and I'm glad of it. My brother Andy is awfully mean to me sometimes. He eats all the food my mistress puts in out bowl and leaves me hungry. Please publish my letter.

Your new friend, AMOS.

My mistress is Margaret Helen Felch, 1601 Argonne place.

Dear Ding-How: I am just writing a few lines to make your acquaintance and I hope you will enjoy my letter, for I always enjoy your contribution to the Pets' Corner whenever I read The Junior Post.

Now I suppose before we go any further you would like to know who I am and I'm truly hoping you won't be angry with me, for I know that dogs aren't always on friendly terms with rabbits, and that is what I am. But, of course, as you are such a fine, intelligent dog, it will be different with you and I hope you will make friends with me. I am a black and white spotted Dutch rabbit, and even though it may sound strange, I have a long tail. Of course, this does make me look a little odd, but I don't want to be a copy cat and look like all other rabbits. My mistress doesn't allow any cats around, for she says they are very dangerous things to be about rabbits, and I think she is right, too, for I am very much afraid of them. A regular coward! I have a nice little house and pen in the back yard, but I'm sometimes turned loose (if I don't get into mischief). I often get into the garden and um-m-m but things do taste good then. But if the gate is shut I have to seek my fun elsewhere. I like to chase the old chickens and make them cackle; the old "sillies," always afraid of just "little me." But whenever I'm caught I always have to be fastened up and go without my next meal, and that nearly kills me. It has been so cold lately that mistress has brought me into the house, where it's good and warm, and what fun I do have poking and messing around, except when my mistress' father comes in and he usually gives me a little kick or knock and says, "that goose ought to be put out of here."

Well, Ding How, I hope my cousin, Easter Bunny, will make you a visit Easter morning and fill your Easter basket plumb to the top, or even to overflowing, and as it's time for my supper, I must close.

Your new friend, SKIPPY.

My mistress' name is Louise B. Wilson (age 14), Weyers Cave, Va.

Spring.

The winter draws slowly to an end,
And spring is seen around the bend;
The snow at last begins to melt,
And the bright sun's warmth is felt.

The little brooklets run again;
Robins are heard in every lane;
Green leaves peep from bush and tree;
Here and there violets you see.

Pussy willows are found in odd spots;
Wild flowers shoot up in vacant lots;
Woods are once more brightly green;
Many other signs of spring are seen.

Spring is the time for fun and joy;
Happiness for man, woman, girl and boy.
And gentle spring is with us now,
And all I can say is, "I'm happy, and how!"

George Washington.

In a little, cozy cottage lived George Washington with his two half-brothers.

George Washington was a real boy, brave, unselfish, true and charitable.

He loved to play soldier with the other boys. They used corn stalks for guns and gourds for drums. But he went to school.

When he was bigger, he wanted to be a sailor. He had no father and his mother loved him very much, so he gave up this in order not to grieve his mother.

At that time there lived a man named Lord Fairfax, and he owned very much land, but he did not know how much, so Washington was asked to measure it and he would pay him very well. Washington accepted this and for three years was out in the wilderness and went through many hardships in those three years. When he came back he was paid very well.

Now the French governor wanted the part of the United States that had been discovered because they thought it was theirs, but the English said, "No, it is ours." So about one month later, the English governor wrote a letter to the French saying to go back to Canada where they were before. But who would take the letter over? Washington asked if he could go. He went, but when he got over there the governor would not accept this, so George had to go back.

On his way he met an Indian who said he would carry his gun, but Washington did not let him, for he saw something he did not like in this Indian's face. It was beginning to grow dark and the Indian would not go. It grew darker and darker.

The Indian went near Washington and nearer. When Washington was paying no attention, the Indian took his gun out and shot, but it did not hit him.

When George came back the governor was not at all pleased with the answer, but he was pleased with George.

Soon after a war began, and the English won.

Now George was back at his home, quiet and not thinking of war. But before long he was called back, and he went.

This time there were more soldiers, for the Thirteen Colonies were together.

They won many victories and at last were free.

When the war was finished, everybody was so pleased with him that they made him the first President of the United States.

Daddy Afishing Goes.

Of all the silly things on which to look
Is daddy sitting by a brook.
On a hot summer day when the sun begins to scorch
I know he'd feel much better on the old front porch.
But there he sits with line in hand,
Positive he is to catch every fish in the land.
He sits and sits and sits some more,
To me that seems, oh, such a bore,
Still he lingers and not a fish,
Then old dad begins to wish.
The fish march by as if in school.
On that line they decide not to bite
For they seem to know it's not just right.
So daddy comes home, face all red.
Done up in cold cream, marches off to bed.
But it's not many days ahead in the spring
We find him back at the same old thing.

Just Turning Eighteen.

What does it feel like to be eighteen?
No one remembers who once has been
At that elegant age of just eighteen.
It's a great deal of bothering growing up;
I very much doubt if I'll like it when
I can not recall what I thought about then.

In the Editor's Letter Box

Dear Editor: I am sending in a letter which I hope will be published. I guess you get lots of letters from boys and girls asking you to publish their things. I read The Junior Post every Sunday and enjoy the stories and poems very much.

Lots of luck to The Junior Post.

MARJORY CUSTIS (age 12).

Dear Editor: Wasn't the Easter edition of The Junior Post fine?

Through The Junior Post I would like to congratulate the boys and girls who contributed the poems, drawings and stories for the Easter number, because they certainly were splendid.

I am inclosing a spring drawing which I have worked very hard on. I hope that you will award my efforts by publishing this in our little paper, The Junior Post.

Thanking you in advance.

Dear Editor: I am a great reader of The Junior Post and would like very much to join your club, as I am very interested in it. I read it very often and enjoy it very much. I got A in drawing at school and thought you would like me to draw some sketches for The Junior Post. I am 11 years of age and in the sixth grade. My name is Peggy Williams and I live at 3567 Holmead place northwest.

Dear Editor: I am a steady reader of The Junior Post. I enjoy seeing all the different drawings and hope my drawing will be included next week.

Inclosed is a drawing. Faithfully yours, ADDA B. THOMASE.

Dear Editor: I must write and tell you how happy I was to read my story that was printed in The Junior Post.

I am making a hard effort in a drawing. Best of wishes.

Dear Editor: I love Egypt so that I could not resist writing about it, as you know I have been in the habit of writing stories. But I have changed my mind. I like poetry better.

Dear Editor: I'm very sorry to be addressing you for practically the last time. But birthdays will came around —even eighteenth birthdays. Isn't it a pity? I thought I could just squeeze under the line with a few contributions for the Big Easter number. My birthday was the 24th, and as Easter was the 27th, I thought it possible. Won't you break a rule and let an 18-year-old reader have something published so soon after her birthday—for old-times' sake? If the contributions warrant publishing, of course. In the meantime, I say "au revoir—not yet adieu. Sincerely,

Dear Editor: The Easter edition of The Junior Post was very good. I am sure every one enjoyed reading it as much as I did.

I am inclosing two poems. One is called "Tidings of Spring," and the other is called "Tommy." Spring is, indeed, a nice topic to write poems and compositions on. I hope you will publish them.

Yours truly, ELLEN BEATY.

The Day Is Done.

The day is done!
And the plowman turning homeward sees the light of the setting sun.
The robin and the bluebird have already flown away,
And the setting sun in the westward marks the close of another day.

The whippoorwill in his domain sings of the summer night,
And the shadows of the darkness marks the day's twilight;
The day's work is over and now 'tis time for rest,
For the twilight is coming and the sun is in the West.

The world is at peace, each man into his own,
For here the day is ended in the glory of the home.
And from the West there comes a light, the rays of the setting sun.
The work is over, the toil is ended and the day is done.

Song of the Nile.

Breezes softly come and go,
As through Egypt flows the Nile,
Onward, onward it does flow,
Further, further many a mile.

Past the palms and coconuts,
Past the pyramids so large,
Through the sandy desert cuts,
Taking with it boat and barge.

Past the tombs of ancient kings,
Down the muddy Nile,
Where the old Egyptians sings,
Further, further many a mile.

GRAEME T. SMALLWOOD, JR.

Tidings of Spring.

We welcome you, spring,
Because of the good tidings that you bring.

The trees are no longer bare,
But are decked with blossoms fair.
The boughs are swinging in the breeze,
Which gently rustle through the leaves.

The flowers are lifting their tiny heads
Out of their soft grassy beds.
Gently nodding in the sun—
They are welcomed by everyone.

Sweet is the glad and joyous refrain
Of the birds that have returned from the South again.
And when their song floats through the air
Heavy hearts are freed from care.

The little children dance and sing,
While the bells merrily ring.
Spring has taken lots of care
To spread brightness everywhere.

I repeat, we welcome you, spring,
Because of the glad tidings that you bring.

I Love My Dolly.

I have a sweet little dolly,
She has a dimple in each cheek;
I call her Poll, but her name is Polly;
I found her on a mountain peak.

She's the sweetest doll you ever saw;
She often called me maw;
She is very, very sweet,
Also very, very neat.

I love my dolly,
She loves you;
Her name is Polly,
Don't you love her, too?

Clouds.

I gaze into the tinted sky,
Just as the sun has gone,
And wonder at its beauty
That's almost like a song.

White clouds are sowly moving
Across the wide expanse;
I catch a sight of figures
Each time I have a chance.

They pile like snowdrifts, lightly,
Or ice cream in a plate,
Of china, blue and bright rose,
That turns deeper when it's late.

George Washington.

It was just two hundred years ago
At Wakefield near the river,
When the stars shone a yellow glow;
That a baby child was born; forever
To stand before his countrymen.
A plain simple-hearted youth,
This boy, George Washington.
He always told the truth
In either work, play or fun.

Little did people dream
That when he older grew,
He was to do things that seem
Impossible for one man to do.
At sixteen a surveyor,
Truthful and honest too.
At twenty-one a major,
In the army of the buff and blue.
A model for his countrymen.

Then later a general he became;
The hero of the Revolution.
A man modest through fame
Who gave his country his devotion.
And when the war was through
We were an independent Nation,
Under the red, white and blue,
The colors of our Nation.
Of the savior of our countrymen.

Later first President was he,
Our country's guiding hand.
He picked the Cabinet as best could be,
Of men who would understand
Just what our country needed.
For us he served eight years;
And all his words we heeded.
He was always greeted with cheers,
This father of his countrymen.

Long may the fame of Washington stay
In the hearts of all who
Hear his name today.
For Washington was ever brave and true,
In a loving patriot's way.
He saved his country in peace and war;
Though later he passed away.
His name shall live forevermore,
The first in the hearts of his countrymen.

A Spring Walk.

Away to cool, wooded paths,
With the birds and the flowers to play,
To walk or skip or rest at will—
To climb or run down a gently sloping hill;
To breathe the fragrant spring air to your fill,
Is a walk on a cool spring day.

In a shady green glen by a brook,
To lie and dream what you may;
To pass away a pleasant hour,
To enjoy the beauty of many a flower,
To scamper home from an April shower;
That's a walk on a cool spring day.

My Favorite Nook.

After the day is over,
And all the work is done,
I hurry to where the clovers
Are nodding in the sun.

It's a peaceful little nook
With clovers here and there,
And in about a minute or two
You'll forget all your cares.

Every one has a favorite nook
To go to now and then,
For me, with my favorite book
I always will go to the clover nook.

Child's Character Built Up With Reminder Cards

THE JUNIOR POST AIRSHIP

"You seem to be polishing up the ship for some great event," said the editor as he waited for the pilot to finishing the directing of the shining up of the airship before they started on their weekly tour of the world.

"Well," said the Pilot as he pulled the stick so they would rise above the City of Washington, "I thought we would take in the aircraft show in Detroit, and we would not like to have The Junior Post Airship compared unfavorably with the shining new airplanes that will be in the air there when we arrive."

"Of course not," said the editor. "But there are several things we want to see in Washington before we start for there."

"Well," said the pilot, "there is the French Ambassador, M. Paul Claudel, just arriving back from a trip to New York, where he attended the thirtieth annual meeting of the Alliance Francaise, that great organization which forms such an important link between the United States and France."

"That it does," said the editor, "and I was pleased to read that M. Claudel praised the exposition to be held in Chicago and urged the French to take part in it in 1933."

"He keeps pretty busy, that Ambassador from France," said the pilot. "Why it was only a few days ago that I saw him posing with the first of the shipment of the poppies for the graves of the members of the American Expeditionary Force who died in France. They are the American Legion poppies to be sent to the American military cemeteries in France."

"We will hear more about them at the annual meeting of the American Red Cross which will open tomorrow at the Red Cross Building," said the editor. "The Red Cross is always ready and this time they will discuss drought relief and unemployment as part of their work of relieving human suffering."

On they flew to Detroit and saw all the planes, even the tiny one which is to be one of a nest of many planes in the new Navy airship Akron, which will go for a trip to the West coast in May, to take part in the war games of the United States Navy in Pacific waters.

At San Diego, Calif., they saw Vincent Astor having such a good time with his new pets, two penguins and a deep sea turtle, which he brought back with him from a scientific cruise aboard his ship Nourmahal.

Then across the Pacific they flew, taking in the situation in China and Japan and enjoying the sights at the "other side of the world."

When they came to Poland in Europe they floated above a detachment of women drilling in one of the reserve training camps and learning to use gas masks.

In Poland, too, they saw many women working at their native arts and encouraging other women to do the same.

As they circled over Italy they saw former Queen Victoria of Spain walking along briskly through the parks at San Remo and not seeming to mind not being a queen any longer.

In Paris they looked down on a meeting of the former members of the American volunteer aviation squadron, the Lafayette Escadrille and delegations of former French and British, Dutch, Swedish, Spanish and Greek volunteers with the allied armies during the World War. These World War aviators from many countries were making a pilgrimage to the tomb of the American volunteer pilots at Marnes Lecoquette.

"That is William Nelson Cromwell, president of the Lafayette Memorial Association, and Pall Rockwell. They are scheduled to make addresses on the heroism of American World War fliers," said the pilot.

When they got to London they looked at once for "Great Britain's darlings," the two children of the Duke and Duchess of York, Princess Elizabeth and Princess Margaret Rose. They saw them in the park with their nice British governess riding along enjoying the spring air and the greetings of the people.

A little further on they "zoomed" down to look in a window and saw Lady Cynthia Colville and Lady Nancy Astor, the American girl who is now a member of the British Parliament, being entertained at luncheon by other distinguished women.

Editors Pleased With Cards Sent By Boys and Girls

One Knight Has Decided to Embark on Quest for New Members.

So many neatly filled out reminder cards have come into the office of the Knighthood of Youth at The Washington Post Building this week that the editors in charge of this department can not but hasten to tell all the member of the Knighthood how very pleased they are about it.

Pretty soon the summer vacation will be here. We hope that by that time we will have enrolled many hundreds more of the boys and girls of Washington between the ages of 6 and 12 under the banner of Knighthood.

One of the members of the Knighthood has decided to go out like the knights of old and start a quest for boys and girls who would like to be members of Knighthood. He says he has such a good time marking up his reminder card himself every night that he would like to think that all his boy and girls friends were doing the same thing.

One mother writes that many of the childish habits she has tried to correct in her young daughter have been corrected by the little girl herself. Since she has been a member of the Knighthood of Youth she has kept a careful check on those habits herself when she comes to fill out the spaces in her reminder card each night.

A father writes us that he likes the Knighthood of Youth because it teaches his son and his small daughter the value of character building. He realizes this character-building must be carried on by each individual himself and therefore he welcomes the progress along these lines in his children.

World Esteems Bravery Among Greater Virtues

People Will Not Follow a Coward; Wild Beasts Are Quick to Kill Him.

Fearlessness is one of the greatest virtues in the lexicon of virtue. A fearless man is trusted by his fellows because he is not afraid to tell the truth.

No real leadership is possible by a coward. People will not follow a coward. The bravest generals secure instant obedience from those who follow them and under their command because they know that a brave man is telling them how to serve and fight best and not asking them to do things he would be afraid to do himself.

Some times it would be easier to run away when in the face of danger, but the brave person will stand and face the danger if that is the courageous thing to do.

Even the wild beasts in the forests recognize a coward at once and give him no chance for his life. They recognize a brave man and have respect for him in their animal way. There have been stories, as you knights know, of brave men who have, unarmed, met beasts and conquered them by their fearless gaze. The animals have turned away and run off into the forest because they recognized their master. The man who is courageous always is master of himself and of any situation he has to face.

Some of the greatest knights of history have faced dangers with a song on their lips rather than turn about and run for safety, unless, of course, retreating was the proper and brave thing to do. Of course, we must remember that it sometimes takes more courage to retreat than it does to go ahead.

HARMONY AT LAST!

THE STORY BOOK LADY

"Father is having book shelves built in my room so I can keep all my books in order there and have them when I grow up," said William as he skated along with Tom and Jack to meet the Story Book Lady and the members of The Junior Post Writers Club and the Knighthood of Youth for the weekly pilgrimage to Story Book Land.

"I think that is a splendid idea," said the Story Book Lady as they joined her. "I hope all the children who are members of The Junior Post clubs and the Knighthood of Youth will keep the books they read now and begin their library with them. Nothing seems so much like an old friend as a book that has been reread and reread."

"Well, I know I am going to keep all the nice books on George Washington my aunt and uncle have sent me this year and on the other early heroes of this Nation. I never get tired of reading about them," said Anne.

"I like to read and reread them and hope I will have a present of some more on my birthday," said Alice.

"I am glad to hear that, for I have been told that a number of books of that kind have arrived in Story Book Land and we will learn all about them today," said the Story Book Lady.

"Good morning," said Mr. Gnome, who keeps the gate of the Fairy Story Bridge that leads to Story Book Land, as he threw open the gate with the help of his three grandsons, Blick and Flick and Little Mick.

"Oh, see," shouted little Lilian as the Story Book Fairy and the two Story Book Fairy Children, Merry and Jolly, flew out of the Fairy Story Woods on nice yellow butterflies instead of airplanes. "It must be nice to have such lovely horses in Story Book Fairy Land."

"Well, the Queen likes to ride nice butterflies, and the butterflies have such a good time going out to see the world," said the Story Book Fairy, as they circled over the heads of the children, followed by Merry and Jolly on their butterflies. The golden butterflies fluttered their wings in delight at being introduced to the Story Book Lady and the members of The Junior Post Writers Club and the Knighthood of Youth, about whom they had heard so much.

"Oh, there is the boy, George Washington, and what a nice looking boy he was, too. He looks just like I expected George Washington to look," said Annabelle as they neared a book street.

"So it is, my dear," said the Story Book Lady, putting on her magic glasses. "It is clever of you to recognize him, but, of course, this book on the young George Washington is very true to life and our conception as contained in all the books we have read on him this year. But another one is always welcome to us George Washington Bicentennial fans."

"I think this looks so nice," said Margaret. "Can we go up the book street?"

"Of course," said the Story Book Lady, as she lingered to read the sign, "'The Young George Washington,' by George L. Thompson (the Beacon Press, Inc., Boston, Mass.). And such attractive pictures of the adventurous sun-tanned youth, which was George Washington by Emily Foster. Here we have George Washington as a boy playing happily as student, almost a sailor. Here he is as the young surveyor and here he is going a voyaging," said the Story Book Lady, as they walked through the book street. "It is indeed a real story of the young Washington, for here he is as a young man, a frontiersman and a planter and taking part in the pleasures of the young people of that day."

"This looks like an interesting book, too," said Ralph, "for us older boys and girls, of course."

"Well," said the Story Book Lady, "I think even the young ones will enjoy it as well as their older brothers and sisters and their parents. 'Sons of Liberty,' by Inez N. McFee (Macrea Smith & Co., Philadelphia), and the illustrations are particularly attractive too, all from old prints."

"Well, of course, I am not an American hero, but I am very nice to read about," said a youth standing at the end of another book street.

"I am sure you are," said the Story Book Lady putting on her magic glasses, "let me see, this is a nice boy from 'Young Trajan,' by Elizabeth Cleveland Miller (Doubleday Doran & Co., Garden City, N. Y.)."

"This is the story of Trajan, the carpenter's son, in picturesque Roumania and that nice looking young girl is in the book too. She is a Roumanian farmer's daughter."

The Only Remedy.

When trouble faces in your path,
And things are upside down
Try to smile and laugh at woes,
And wipe away the frown.

Look at the brightest side of life
Cast the other side away
Be indulgent in happy thoughts
And make the best of the day.

The illustration: A woman of Java at work in the rice fields.

Java, Tropical Isle of Glamor, Rice, and Coffee

THE AMERICAN who wanders into distant Java will find himself confronted with some of the typical riddles which the Far East presents to the traveler from the occident.

It is customary for us to associate densely populated districts with a great deal of bustle and a feverish struggle for existence. But in Java, where 45,000,000 people are concentrated in an area equal to that of New York state, life moves on in a tranquil, pastoral vein, the workers being undisturbed by the fact that they are struggling for the bare necessities.

Most of the population of the island is engaged in the production of rice and coffee, but sugar, tea, and tobacco also are raised. The low, marshy plains are well suited for the cultivation of rice, and the patient, hardy nature of the inhabitants, who are capable of laboring through the heat of the day without complaint, makes possible the raising of this crop on a large scale.

Java is an island of contrasts which the American finds difficult to understand. To the very edge of the tilled fields the jungle comes creeping, still untamed though the plains have been settled for centuries. In its dark fastnesses the rhinoceros grazes, ever alert for the coming of man. Through the underbrush the leopard moves stealthily and the wildcat crouches upon overhanging branches. Even the tiger may be glimpsed at times in some deep recess of the forest. And poisonous reptiles glide through long, lush grasses or twine themselves lazily about the limbs of trees. In the adjoining fields the patient buffalo, domesticated for centuries, works for man, drawing burdens right up to the edge of the jungle where his wild cousins roam.

Upon the plains between the blue sea and the green jungle, little villages repose, almost invisible beneath their canopies of palms. The houses are for the most part bamboo, with here and there one of stone.

Over the entire scene tower the mountains. A traveler heading from the seacoast toward the high country of the interior goes through many gradations of climate. First he is in the hot lowlands, passing along a road between tilled fields. Then he enters the jungle and climbs up to the moderate zone, which begins at a height of about 2,000 feet and extends to about 4,500 feet. There the cool zone commences and continues to approximately 7,500 feet, above which cold areas extend up to the

By John A. Menaugh

ONCE in a blue moon there filters out from the orient some scrap of news to remind a forgetful world that there is a steaming tropical jungleland, larger in area than the state of New York, that has been ruled over by white men of three generations. Sarawak, "the land of the white rajahs," is a strip of territory, with a coast line of 500 miles, on the north side of the island of Borneo.

What brought Sarawak to recent public attention was the dispatch from London to the effect that the wife of the brother of the present rajah had been received into the Moslem faith while flying in an airplane from England to France. The princess who renounced Christianity to become a follower of the Islamic prophet is an Englishwoman, the daughter of the late Sir Charles Palmer of Reading. She is the wife of Maj. Bertram Brooke, tuan muda of Sarawak, the brother of Sir Charles Vyner Brooke, the rajah. Major Brooke is slated to become rajah in the event that Sir Charles precedes him in death. The princess who has just turned Mohammedan is known in Sarawak as the dayang muda She has adopted as her Mohammedan name Khairulnissa—fairest of women.

The rule of the white rajahs dates back to the early forties. James Brooke, an English officer and gentleman, who was born at Coombe Grove, near Bath, in 1803, arrived at Sarawak in 1840 in his own vessel, the Royalist, while on a cruise of the Indian archipelago for the purpose of rescuing from barbarism the various islanders of that part of the world. Sarawak at that time was part of the dominion of the sultan of Brunei. Rajah Muda Hasim, uncle of the sultan and heir presumptive to the throne, was having considerable trouble trying to quell a rebellion of the natives of Sarawak. He prevailed upon Brooke to help him put down the outbreak, and in return for the Englishman's services he ceded Sarawak to the foreigner.

Brooke became rajah in 1841, and the next year his elevation to the throne of that country was confirmed by the sultan at Brunei. Brooke spent much of his time in Sarawak, although he had other offices under the British East India company. In 1857 he almost lost his life in an uprising of Chinese pirates The Chinese drove him from the city of Kuching and burned his palace, but Brooke organized a small force of natives and recaptured the city.

In 1851 he was accused in the house of commons of mismanagement of affairs in Sarawak, but the charges were never proved. Brooke was created K.C.B. in 1863, and in 1868 was succeeded as rajah by his nephew, Charles Johnson Brooke. Sir James died in Devonshire at an old age.

Charles Brooke, who had entered the service of his uncle when a youth, ruled Sarawak as rajah admirably, instituting many governmental reforms and improving the country in divers ways. In 1888 he was created G.C.M.G. by the king of England, at the same time that Great Britain established a protectorate over Sarawak. In 1904 King Edward formally recognized the title of his highness, the rajah of Sarawak

Sir Charles Vyner Brooke, G.C.M.G., the son of the first Sir Charles, became rajah in 1917. His wife, the ranee, is the former Lady Sylvia Brett, daughter of Viscount Esher.

Sarawak, 50,000 square miles in area and with more than a half million inhabitants, today is in a sound financial and economic position, a country without a national debt. It is rich in natural resources, though not far advanced in development, as a great majority of its people are still in a savage or semi-civilized state. In the towns there are a few thousand Chinese and East Indian merchants and traders, but the jungles are inhabited solely by the wild tribes. It was only recently that head-hunting was stamped out by officials working under the orders of the white rajah.

The Sea Dyaks or Ibans to use the native name are the largest and most progressive tribe of Sarawak. Their love for adventure made them ready pupils of the piratical Malays in the early days, but now their initiative has been turned into useful channels They dwell along the sea coast, and are skilful navigators, often sailing great distances in their fragile craft. They are Mohammedans, but retain many of the rites and customs of their idolatrous ancestors. Their chief amusement is cock fighting.

The Land Dyaks dwell inland, and are rather less enterprising and energetic than the Sea Dyaks In common with other tribes of Borneo, their houses are long communal dwellings, built upon posts eight to ten feet from the ground. Many of the young people of the Land Dyaks are finely developed physically, but the women deform their arms and legs with great coils of heavy brass wire.

Perhaps the most interesting tribe in Sarawak and one of those least affected by contact with foreigners is the Kayan, which occupies the headwaters of the Baram and Rejang rivers, in the northerly part of the country, and extending also into Dutch Borneo. The Kayans for unknown generations have lived almost entirely isolated in the interior of the island. These people are believed to have been of Caucasic origin, and are thought to have entered Borneo by the way of Burma. The Kayans keep slaves, who are the descendants of their enemies captured in war.

Other tribes of Sarawak are the Muruts, Kenyahs, Punans, and Klemantas. Among some there are inter-tribal relations, although each tribe has its distinctive rites and customs, and the members thereof differ from those of other tribes in their manner of dress Virtually all of the inland tribes are proficient with the sumpitan, or blowgun, that long tubular weapon used for shooting poisoned darts in war or in the quest of game

Sarawak is a paradise for the naturalist. There can be found rare butterflies, birds, and orchids. Sarawak is the home of the orang outang, an occasional rhinoceros and tiger, and many other forms of animal life In the jungles are giant jelutong and tapang trees, almost as tall as the great redwoods of the United States.

THE NEW-MOON OF MERCURY
WRITTEN BY- PHIL NOWLAN - DRAWN BY- DICK CALKINS Buck Rogers
25th CENTURY A.D.
STARTLING AND TITANIC EVENTS FOLLOWED OUR COUNTER-ATTACK ON THE ODDLANIANS, IN WHICH WE LOOSED A GREAT FLOOD OF MELTED ICE FROM THE FROZEN HEMISPHERE OF MERCURY INTO THE BLAZING DESERT - THE WATERS, INSTEAD OF SPREADING OVER THE STRONGHOLD OF THE ENEMY, SANK INTO THE THIRSTY SAND, FOUND THEIR WAY THROUGH FISSURES TO SUBTERRANEAN DEPTHS AND TURNED TO STEAM! THE PLANET WAS ROCKED BY A MIGHTY EXPLOSION - STORMS SHRIEKED AND HOWLED OVER ITS SURFACE - THE SUN ZIG-ZAGGED CRAZILY IN THE SKY SHINING AT TIMES ON THE FROZEN HEMISPHERE - OUR ALLIES THE KOLLANIANS, FLED IN PANIC FROM THEIR MELTING CITIES OF ICE.
THEIR HEAD MAN ACCUSED US.
SEE! SEE WHAT YOU'VE DONE! - WE CAN'T STAND TEMPERATURES ABOVE FREEZING FOR LONG!
WELL, IT WAS YOUR PLAN AS MUCH AS OURS! AND DIDN'T WE-
SHUSH-ALURA! NO USE ARGUING! - WE'VE JUST GOT TO FLY OVER TO THE OTHER HEMISPHERE AND SEE WHAT DID HAPPEN.
SO WE SET FORTH - WITH OUR FLYING BELTS, AND HEAT-INSULATED SUITS AND HELMETS SUPPLIED BY THE KOLLANIANS.
SOMETHING TERRIBLE MUST HAVE HAPPENED BUDDY! THIS PLANET IS JUST WOBBLING ON ITS AXIS!
WE'LL HEAD RIGHT FOR THE CENTER OF THE SUNWARD HEMISPHERE AND FIND OUT!!
THE SNOW TURNED TO HOT RAIN.
I DON'T SEE HOW WE'RE GOING TO DISCOVER ANYTHING - WE CAN'T SEE A THING!
THEY SAY THE SUN HAS NEVER BEFORE BEEN OBSCURED OVER THE BLAZING DESERT - WE'VE PASSED THE TWILIGHT ZONE, I'M SURE!
BUT FINALLY THE SUN FLAMED THROUGH A RIFT IN THE STORM CLOUDS, AND WE LANDED.
GOOD NIGHT, BUDDY! - IT LOOKS AS IF WE WERE ON A MOUNTAIN TOP - MILES HIGH!!
BUT WE'RE NOT! - THE GROUND IS LEVEL BEHIND US! - WE'RE LOOKING INTO AN IMMENSE HOLE IN THE PLANET!
WE FLEW DOWN - BELOW THE CLOUDS.
THIS IS AMAZING! THERE'S NO END TO THE DEPTH OR WIDTH OF IT!
AS IF A VAST SECTION OF THE PLANET HAD BEEN TORN RIGHT OUT!
NOT A SIGN OF LIFE DID WE SEE UNTIL - MILES FARTHER DOWN — LOOK! THERE'S SOMETHING MOVING!
IT'S A MAN! - AN ODLANNIAN! WE'LL CAPTURE HIM!
IT'S ALL RIGHT BUDDY! THERE'S NO FIGHT LEFT IN HIM!!

Starting high among the snow-laden mountains of French Morocco, the ill-fated river Ziz, has made for itself a broad, fertile valley that could not otherwise exist. Flourishing villages and fortified towers, the homes of thriving communities, are dependent alone upon this river. All along its winding course the water is diverted to make the land green, to give life to the gardens by irrigation.

But the type of humanity that has taken refuge here hardly bears out this peaceful impression. Powerful chieftains hold sway over political and spiritual life. They use their influence as it suits them best, in favor of peace or war. In times of national excitement they become a focus of revolt. With the hot tropical sun beating down on their yellow towers of mud, the picture is changed to that of a fantastic age. These tribesmen of the desert are inclosed in a world of dilapidation. Like all else in Morocco they are creatures of strange and violent contrasts.

But the river pursues its course, asking leave of no man. Its battle is with the stern hills that inclose it, massive forms and shapes that look as though they would defy time itself. Beyond, the shifting sands seem to spell treachery the same as that they have inspired in the very souls of their kinsmen, the nomads of the desert, for nature and man are equally violent here. Yet the beautiful palms sway in the breeze; rose petals and blooms of the almond fall to the ground. But past them all the pale, turquoise river flows on . . . to its death in the sands of the Sahara.

All's fair in love and war, according to the ancient general, Hsiang Chi. Capturing an army is one thing and knowing what to do with it is another. Food was probably one of Chi's greatest worries and feeding 100,000 extra men was out of the question. The general could at least have killed his prisoners before burying them but he no doubt figured that it would be a waste of labor. Burying 100,000 men alive is not a pleasant thought but it was all a matter of course with Chinese generals of twenty-two hundred years ago.
